1. Detection of guilt, which is, in law, either when a man is outlawed, or appears and confesses, or else is found guilty by the inquest. Cowell.

The third best absent is condemn'd,
Convict by flight, and rebel to all law;
Conviction to the serpent none belongs.
Milton's Par. Lost.

2. The act of convincing; confutation; the act of forcing others, by argument, to allow a position.

When therefore the apostle requireth ability to convict hereticks, can we think he judgeth it a thing unlawful, and not rather needful, to use the principal instrument of their conviction, the light of reason? Hooker.

The manner of his conviction was designed, not as a peculiar privilege to him, but as a standing miracle, a lasting argument for the conviction of others, to the very end of the world. Atterbury.

3. State of being convinced.

Their wisdom is only of this world, to put false colours upon things, to call good evil, and evil good, against the conviction of their own consciences. Swift.

CONVI'CTIVE. adj. [from convict.] Having the power of convincing.

To CONVI'NCE. v. a. [convinco, Lat.]

1. To force any one to acknowledge a contested position.

That which I have all this while been endeavouring to convince men of, and to persuade them to, is no other but what God himself doth particularly recommend to us, as proper for human consideration. Tillotson.

But, having shifted ev'ry form to 'scape,
Convinc'd of conquest, he resum'd his shape.
Dryden's Virgil.

History is all the light we have in many cases; and we receive from it a great part of the useful truths we have, with a convincing evidence.
Locke.

2. To convict; to prove guilty of.

To convince all that are ungodly among them, of all their ungodly deeds. Jude, 15.

O seek not to convince me of a crime,
Which I can ne'er repent, nor can you pardon.
Dryden.

3. To evince; to prove; to manifest; to vindicate. Not in use.

Your Italy contains none so accomplished a courtier, to convince the honour of my mistress.
Shakesp. Cymbeline.

This letter, instead of a confutation, only urgeth me to prove divers passages of my sermon, which M. Cheynel's part was to convince. Dr. Maine.

4. To overpower; to surmount. This sense is now obsolete.

There are a crew of wretched souls
That stay his cure; their malady convinces
The great essay of art. Shakesp. Macbeth.

Knaves be such abroad,
Who having, by their own importunate suit,
Or voluntary dotage of some mistress,
Convinc'd or supplied them, they cannot chuse
But they must blab. Shakesp. Othello.

When Duncan asleep, his two chamberlains
Will I with wine and wassel so convince,
That memory, the warder of the brain,
Shall be a fume. Shakesp. Macbeth.

CONVI'NCEMENT. n. s. [from convince.] Conviction.

If that be not convincement enough, let him weigh the other also. Decay of Piety.

CONVI'NCIBLE. adj. [from convince.]

1. Capable of conviction.

2. Capable of being evidently disproved or detected.

Upon what uncertainties, and also convincible falsities, they often erected such emblems, we have delivered. Brown.

CONVI'NCINGLY. adv. [from convince.] In such a manner as to leave no room for doubt or dispute; so as to produce conviction.

This he did so particularly and convincingly, that those of the parliament were in great confusion.
Clarendon.

The resurrection is so convincingly attested by such persons, with such circumstances, that they who consider and weigh the testimony, at what distance soever they are placed, cannot entertain any more doubt of the resurrection than the crucifixion of Jesus. Atterbury.

CONVI'NCINGNESS. n. s. [from convincing.] The power of convincing.

To CONVI'VE. v. a. [convivo, Lat.] To entertain; to feast. A word, I believe, not elsewhere used.

First, all you peers of Greece, go to my tent,
There in the full convive you.
Shakesp. Troilus and Cressida.

CONVI'VAL, } adj. [convivialis, Lat.] Re-
CONVI'VIAL, } lating to an entertainment; festal; social.

I was the first who set up festivals;
Not with high tastes our appetites did force,
But fill'd with conversation and discourse;
Which feasts, convivial meetings we did name.
Denham.

Your social and convivial spirit is such, that it is a happiness to live and converse with you.
Dr. Newton.

CONU'NDRUM. n. s. A low jest; a quibble; a mean conceit: a cant word.

Mean time he smoaks, and laughs at merry tale,
Or pun ambiguous, or conundrum quaint. Philips.

To CO'NVOCATE. v. a. [convoco, Lat.] To call together; to summon to an assembly.

CONVOCA'TION. n. s. [convocatio, Lat.]

1. The act of calling to an assembly.

Diaphantus, making a general convocation, spake to them in this manner. Sidney.

2. An assembly.

On the eighth day shall be an holy convocation unto you. Lev. xxiii. 20.

3. An assembly of the clergy for consultation upon matters ecclesiastical, in time of parliament: and, as the parliament consists of two distinct houses, so does this; the one called the upper house, where the archbishops and bishops sit severally by themselves; the other the lower house, where all the rest of the clergy are represented by their deputies. Cowell.

I have made an offer to his majesty,
Upon our spiritual convocation,
As touching France, to give a greater sum
Than ever at one time the clergy yet
Did to his predecessors part withal. Shak. H. IV.

This is the declaration of our church about it, made by those who met in convocation.
Stilling fleet.

To CONVO'KE. v. a. [convoco, Lat.] To call together; to summon to an assembly.

Assemblies exercise their legislature at the times that their constitution, or their own adjournment, appoints, if there be no other way prescribed to convoke them. Locke.

When next the morning warms the purple east,
Convoke the peerage. Pope's Odyssey.

The senate originally consisted all of nobles, the people being only convoked upon such occasions as fell into their cognizance. Swift.

To CONVO'LVE. v. a. [convolvo, Lat.] To roll together; to roll one part upon another.

He writh'd him to and fro convolv'd. Milton.

It is a wonderful artifice how newly hatched maggots, not the parent animal, because she emits no web, nor hath any textrine art, can convolve the stubborn leaf, and bind it with the thread it weaves from its body. Derham.

Us'd to milder scents, the tender race
By thousands tumble from their honey'd domes
Convolv'd and agonising in the dust.
Thomson's Autumn.

CO'NVOLUTED. part. [of the verb I have found no example.] Twisted; rolled upon itself.

This differs from Muscovy-glass only in this, that the plates of that are flat and plain, whereas these are convoluted and inflected.
Woodward on Fossils.

CONVOLU'TION. n. s. [convolutio, Lat.]

1. The act of rolling any thing upon itself; the state of being rolled upon itself.

Observe the convolution of the said fibres in all other glands, in the same or some other manner.
Grew's Cosmologia.

A thousand secret, subtle pipes bestow,
From which, by num'rous convolutions wound,
Wrapp'd with th' attending nerve, and twisted round. Blackmore.

2. The state of rolling together in company.

And toss'd wide round,
O'er the calm sea, in convolution swift
The feather'd eddy floats. Thomson's Autumn.

To CONVOY. v. a. [convoyer, Fr. from conviare, low Lat.] To accompany by land or sea, for the sake of defence: as, he was convoyed by ships of war.

CO'NVOY. n. s. [from the verb. Anciently the accent was on the last syllable; it is now on the first.]

1. One attending on the road by way of defence.

Had not God set peculiar value upon his temple, he would not have made himself his people's convoy to secure them in their passage to it.
South's Sermons.

My soul grows hard, and cannot death endure;
Your convoy makes the dangerous way secure.
Dryden's Aurengzebe.

Convoy ships accompany their merchants, till they may prosecute the voyage without danger.
Dryden's Pref. Dufresnoy.

2. The act of attending as a defence.

Such fellows will learn you by rote where services were done; at such a breach, at such a convoy. Shakesp. Henry V.

Swift, as a sparkle of a glancing star,
I shoot from heav'n to give him safe convoy.
Milton's Paradise Regained.

3. Conveyance. Not now in use.

Sister, as the winds give benefit,
And convoy is assistant, do not sleep,
But let me hear from you. Shakesp.

CO'NUSANCE. n. s. [conoissance, Fr.] Cognizance; notice; knowledge. A law term.

To CONVU'LSE. v. a. [convulsus, Lat.] To give an irregular and involuntary motion to the parts of any body.

Follows the loosen'd, aggravated roar,
Enlarging, deepening, mingling peal on peal,
Crush'd horrible, convulsing heaven and earth.
Thomson.

CONVU'LSION. n. s. [convulsio, Lat.]

1. A convulsion is an involuntary contraction of the fibres and muscles, whereby the body and limbs are preternaturally distorted. Quincy.

If my hand be put into motion by a convulsion, the indifferency of that operative faculty is taken away. Locke.

2. Any irregular and violent motion; tumult; commotion; disturbance.

All have been subject to some concussions, and fall under the same convulsions of state, by dissensions or invasions. Temple.

CONVU'LSIVE. adj. [convulsif, Fr.] That which produces involuntary motion; that which gives twitches or spasms.

They are irregular and convulsive motions, or strugglings of the spirits. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

Shew me the flying soul's convulsive strife,
And all the anguish of departing life.
Dryden's Aurengzebe.

Her colour chang'd, her face was not the same,
And hollow groans from her deep spirit came;
Her hair stood up; convulsive rage possess'd
Her trembling limbs, and heav'd her lab'ring breast. Dryden.

In silence weep,
And thy convulsive sorrows inward keep. Prior.

CONY. n. s. [kanin, Germ. connil or connin, Fr. cuniculus, Lat.] A rabbit; an animal that burroughs in the ground.

With a short-legg'd hen,
Lemons and wine for sauce; to these a cony
Is not to be despair'd of, for our money.
Ben Jonson's Epigrams.

The husbandman suffers by hares and conys, which eat the corn and trees. Mortimer's Husb.

CONY-BOROUGH. n. s. A place where rabbits make their holes in the ground.

To CO'NYCATCH. v. n. To catch a cony, is, in the old cant of thieves, to cheat; to bite; to trick.

I have matter in my head against you, and against your conycatching rascals.
Shakesp. Merry Wives of Windsor.

CO'NYCATCHER. n. s. A thief; a cheat; a sharper; a tricking fellow; a rascal. Now obsolete.

To COO. v. n. [from the sound.] To cry as a dove or pigeon.

The stockdove only through the forest coos,
Mournfully hoarse. Thomson's Summer.

COOK. n. s. [coquus, Lat.] One whose profession is to dress and prepare victuals for the table.

One mistress Quickly is in the manner of his nurse, or his dry-nurse, or his cook, or his laundry, his washer, and his wringer.
Shakesp. Merry Wives of Windsor.

The new-born babe by nurses overlaid,
And the cook caught within the raging fire he made. Dryden.

Their cooks could make artificial birds and fishes, in default of the real ones, and which exceeded them in the exquisiteness of the taste.
Arbuthnot on Coins.

COOK-MAID. n. s. [cook and maid.] A maid that dresses provisions.

A friend was complaining to me, that his wife had turned off one of the best cook-maids in England. Addison.

COOK-ROOM. n. s. [cook and room.] A room in which provisions are prepared for the ship's crew. The kitchen of a ship.

The commodity of this new cook-room the merchants having found to be so great, as that in all their ships the cook-rooms are built in their forecastles, contrary to that which had been anciently used. Raleigh's Essays.

To COOK. v. a. [coquo, Lat.]

1. To prepare victuals for the table.

Had either of the crimes been cooked to their palates, they might have changed messes.
Decay of Piety

2. To prepare for any purpose.

Hanging is the word, Sir; if you be ready for that, you are well cookt. Shakesp. Cymbeline.

COO'KERY. n. s. [from cook.] The art of dressing victuals.

Some man's wit
Found th' art of cook'ry to delight his sense:
More bodies are consum'd and kill'd with it,
Than with the sword, famine, or pestilence. Davies.

Ev'ry one to cookery pretends. King's Cookery.

These are the ingredients of plants before they are prepared by cookery. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

COOL. adj. [koelen, Dut.]

1. Somewhat cold; approaching to cold.

He set his leg in a pail-full, as hot as he could well endure it, renewing it as it grew cool. Temple.

2. Not zealous; not ardent; not angry; not fond; without passion: as, a cool friend; a cool deceiver.

COOL. n. s. Freedom from heat; soft and refreshing coldness.

But see where Lucia, at her wonted hour,
Amid the cool of yon high marble arch,
Enjoys the noon-day breeze. Addison's Cato.

Philander was enjoying the cool of the morning, among the dews that lay on every thing about him, and that gave the air a freshness. Addis. on Med.

To COOL. v. a. [koelen, Dut.]

1. To make cool; to allay heat.

Snow they use in Naples instead of ice, because, as they say, it cools or congeals any liquor sooner. Addison on Italy.

Jelly of currants, or the jelly of any ripe subacid fruit, is cooling, and very agreeable to the stomach. Arbuthnot on Diet.

2. To quiet passion; to calm anger; to moderate zeal.

My Lord Northumberland will soon be cool'd. Shakesp. Henry IV.

He will keep his jealously to himself, and repine in private, because he will be apt to fear some ill effect it may produce in cooling your love to him. Addison's Spectator.

Had they thought they had been fighting only other people's quarrels, perhaps it might have cooled their zeal. Swift.

To COOL. v. n.

1. To grow less hot.

2. To grow less warm with regard to passion or inclination.

My humour shall not cool; I will incense Ford to deal with poison; I will possess him with yellowness. Shakesp.

You never cool while you read Homer. Dryd.

I'm impatient till it be done; I will not give myself liberty to think, lest I should cool. Congreve's Old Bachelor.

CO'OLER. n. s. [from cool.]

1. That which has the power of cooling the body.

Coolers are of two sorts; first, those which produce an immediate sense of cold, which are such as have their parts in less motion than those of the organs of feeling; and secondly, such as, by particular viscidity, or grossness of parts, give a greater consistence to the animal fluids than they had before, whereby they cannot move so fast, and therefore will have less of that intestine force on which their heat depends. The former are fruits, all acid liquors, and common water; and the latter are such as cucumbers, and all substances producing viscidity. Quincy.

In dogs or cats there appeared the same necessity for a cooler as in man. Harvey on Consumptions.

Acid things were used only as coolers. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

2. A vessel in which any thing is made cool.

Your first wort being thus boiled, lade off into one or more coolers, or cool-backs, in which leave the sullage behind, and let it run off fine. Mortimer's Husbandry.

CO'OLLY. adv. [from cool.]

1. Without heat, or sharp cold.

She in the gelid caverns, woodbine wrought,
And fresh bedew'd with ever-spouting streams,
Sits coolly calm Thomson's Summer.

2. Without passion.

Motives that address themselves coolly to our reason, are fittest to be employed upon reasonable creatures. Atterbury.

CO'OLNESS. n. s. [from cool.]

1. Gentle cold; a soft or mild degree of cold.

This difference consisteth not in the heat or coolness of spirits; for cloves and other spices, naptha, and petroleum, have exceeding hot spirits, hotter a great deal than oil, wax, or tallow, but not inflamed. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

The toad loveth shade and coolness
Bacon's Nat. Hist.

Yonder the harvest of cold months laid up,
Gives a fresh coolness to the royal cup;
There ice, like crystal, firm and never lost,
Tempers hot July with December's frost. Waller.

The sheep enjoy the coolness of the shade.
Dryden's Virgil.

2. Want of affection; disinclination.

They parted with such coolness towards each other, as if they scarce hoped to meet again. Clar.

3. Freedom from passion.

COOM. n. s. [ecume, Fr.]

1. Soot that gathers over an oven's mouth. Phillips.

2. That matter that works out of the wheels of carriages. Bailey.

COOP. n. s. [kuype, Dut.

1. A barrel; a vessel for the preservation of liquids.

2. A cage; a penn for animals, as poultry or sheep.

Gracchus was slain the day the chickens refused to eat out of the coop; and Claudius Pulcher underwent the like success, when he contemned the tripudiary augurations. Brown.

There were a great many crammed capons together in a coop. L'Estrange.

To COOP. v. a. [from the noun.] To shut up in a narrow compass; to confine; to cage; to imprison: when it is used absolutely, it has often, perhaps always, the intensive particle up.

That pale, that white-fac'd shore,
Whose foot spurns back the ocean's roaring tides,
And coops from other lands her islanders.
Shakesp. King John.

The Englishmen did coop up the lord Ravenstein, that he stirred not; and likewise held in strait siege the town. Bacon.

In the taking of a town the poor escape better than the rich; for the one is let go, and the other is plundered and cooped up. L'Estrange.

Twice conquer'd cowards, now your shame is shown,
Coop'd up a second time within your town!
Who dare not issue forth in open field. Dryd. Æneid.

One world suffic'd not Alexander's mind;
Coop'd up he seem'd, in earth and seas confin'd.
Dryden's Juvenal.

Coop'd up in a narrow isle, observing dreams
With flattering wizards. Dryden's Juvenal.

The Trojans, coop'd within their walls so long,
Unbar their gates, and issue in a throng.
Dryden's Æneid.

The contempt of all other knowledge, as if it were nothing in comparison of law or physick, of astrology or chymistry, coops the understanding up within narrow bounds, and hinders it from looking abroad into other provinces of the intellectual world. Locke.

They are cooped in close by the laws of their countries, and the strict guards of those whose interest it is to keep them ignorant. Locke.

What! coop whole armies in our walls again! Pope

COOPE'E. n. s. [coupé Fr.] A motion in dancing.

CO'OPER. n. s. [coop.] One that makes coops or barrels.

Societies of artificers and tradesmen, belonging to some towns corporate, such as weavers and coopers, by virtue of their charters, pretend to privilege and jurisdiction. Child.

CO'OPERAGE. n. s. [from cooper.] The price paid for cooper's work.

To COO'PERATE. v. n. [con and opera, Lat.]

1. To labour jointly with another to the same end; it has with before the agent, and to before the end.

It puzzleth and perplexeth the conceits of many, that perhaps would otherwise cowerate with him, and makes a man walk almost alone to his own ends. Bacon.

By giving man a free will, he allows man that highest satisfaction and privilege of cooperating to his own felicity. Boyle.

2. To concur in producing the same effect.

His mercy will not forgive offenders, or his benignity cooperate to their conversions.
Brown's Vulgar Errours.

All these causes cooperating, must, at last, weaken their motion. Cheyne's Philosophical Principles.

The special acts and impressions by which the Divine Spirit introduces this change, and how far human liberty cooperates with it, are subjects beyond our comprehension. Rogers.

COOPERA'TION. n. s. [from cooperate.] The act of contributing or concurring to the same end.

We might work any effect without and against matter; and this not holpen by the cooperation of angels or spirits, but only by the unity and harmony of nature. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

COO'PERATIVE. adj. [from cooperate.] Promoting the same end jointly.

COO'PERATOR. n. s. [from cooperate.] He that, by joint endeavours, promotes the same end with others.

COOPTA'TION. n. s. [coopto, Lat.] Adoption; assumption.

COO'RDINATE. adj. [con and ordinatus, Lat.] Holding the same rank; not being subordinate. Thus shell-fish may be divided into two coordinate kinds, crustaceous and testaceous; each of which is again divided into many species, subcordinate to the kind, but coordinate to each other.

The word Analysis signifies the general and particular heads of a discourse, with their mutual connections, both coordinate and subordinate, drawn out into one or more tables. Watts.

COO'RDINATELY. adv. [from coordinate.] In the same rank; in the same relation; without subordination.

COO'RDINATENESS. n. s. [from coordinate.] The state of being coordinate.

COO'RDINATION. n. s. [from coordinate.] The state of holding the same rank; of standing in the same relation to something higher; collateralness.

'In this high court of parliament there is a rare coordinatim of power, a wholesome mixture betwixt monarchy, optimacy, and democracy.
Howel's Pre-eminence of Parliament.

When these petty intrigues of a play are so ill ordered, that they have no coherence with the other, I must grant that Lysidius has reason to tax that want of due connexion; for coordination in a play is as dangerous and unnatural as in a state.
Dryden on Dramatic Poesy.

COOT. n. s. [maer-koet, Dut. cotée, Fr.] A small black water-fowl, seen often in fens and marshes.

A lake, the haunt
Of coots, and of the fishing cormorant.
Dryden's Fables.

COP. n. s. [kop, Dut. coq, Sax.] The head; the top of any thing; any thing rising to a head: as, a cop, vulgarly cock, of hay; a cob castle, properly cop-castle, a small castle or house on a hill; a cob of cherry-stones, for cop, a pile of stones one laid upon another; a tuft on the head of birds.

COPAL. n. s. The Mexican term for a gum.

COPA'RCENARY. n. s. [from coparcener.] Joint succession to any inheritance.

In descent to all the daughters in coparcenary, for want of sons, the chief house is allotted to the eldest daughter. Hale's History of Common Law.

COPA'RCENER. n. s. [from con and particeps, Lat.]

Coparceners are otherwise called parceners; and, in common law, are such as have equal portion in the inheritance of the ancestor. Cowell.

This great lordship was broken and divided, and partition made between the five daughters: in every of these portions, the coparceners severally exercised the same jurisdiction royal, which the earl marshal and his sons had used in the whole province. Davies on Ireland.

COPA'RCENY. n. s. An equal share of coparceners. Phillips's World of Words.

COPA'RTNER. n. s. [co and partner.] One that has a share in some common stock or affair; one equally concerned; a sharer; a partaker; a partner. Milton has used it both with of and in.

Our faithful friends,
Th' associates and copartners of our loss.
Milton's Par. Lost.

Shall I to him make known
As yet my change, and give him to partake
Full happiness with me? Or rather not;
But keep the odds of knowledge in my pow'r,
Without copartner? Milton's Par. Lost.

Rather by them
I gain'd what I have gain'd, and with them dwell
Copartner in these regions of the world.
Milton's Par. Regained.

COPA'RTNERSHIP. n. s. [from copartner.] The state of bearing an equal part, or possessing an equal share.

In case the father left only daughters, the daughters equally succeeded to their father as in copartnership. Hale.

CO'PATAIN. adj. [from cop.] High raised; pointed. Hanmer.

Oh, fine villain! a silken doublet, a velvet hose, a scarlet cloke, and a copatain hat.
Shakesp. Taming of the Shrew.

COPA'YVA. n. s. [It is sometimes written capivi, copivi, capayva, copayva, cupayva, cupayba.] A gum which distils from a tree in Brasil. It is much used in disorders of the urinary passages.

COPE. n. s. [See COP.]

1. Any thing with which the head is covered.
2. A sacerdotal cloak, or vestment worn in sacred ministration.
3. Any thing which is spread over the head; as the concave of the skies; any archwork over a door.

All these things that are contained
Within this goodly cope, both most and least,
Their being have, and daily are increast. Spenser.

Over head the dismal hiss
Of fiery darts in flaming volleys flew,
And flying vaulted either host with fire;
So, under fiery cope, together rush'd
Both battles main. Milton's Par. Lost.

The scholar believes there is no man under the cope of heaven, who is so knowing as his master.
Dryden.

To* COPE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To cover, as with a cope.

A very large bridge, that is all made of wood, and coped over head. Addison on Italy.

2. To contend with; to oppose.

Know my name is lost,
By treason's tooth bare gnawn, and canker-bit;
Yet am I noble as the adversary
I come to cope. Shakesp. King Lear.

3. To reward; to give in return.

I and my friend
Have, by your wisdom, been this day acquitted
Of grievous penalties; in lieu whereof,
Three thousand ducats, due unto the Jew,
We freely cope your courteous pains withal. Shak.

To* COPE. v. n.

1. To contend; to struggle; to strive. It has with before the thing or person opposed. [In this sense it is a word of doubtful etymology. The conjecture of Junius derives it from koopen to buy, or some other word of the same import; so that to cope with signifies to interchange blows, or any thing else, with another.]

Let our trains
March by us, that we may peruse the men
We should have cop'd withal. Shak. Hen. IV.

It is likely thou wilt undertake
A thing, like death, to chide away this shame,
That copes with death itself, to 'scape from it.
Shakesp.

But Eve was Eve;
This far his over-match, who, self-deceiv'd,
And rash, beforehand had no better weigh'd
The strength he was to cope with, or his own.
Milton.

They perfectly understood both the hares and the enemy they were to cope withal. L'Estrange.

On every plain,
Host cop'd with host, dire was the din of war.
Philips.

Their generals have not been able to cope with the troops of Athens, which I have conducted.
Addison's Whig Examiner.

If the mind apply itself first to easier subjects, and things near a-kin to what is already known; and then advance to the more remote and knotty parts of knowledge by slow degrees, it will be able, in this manner, to cope with great difficulties, and prevail over them with amazing and happy success. Watts on the Mind.

2. To encounter; to interchange kindness or sentiments.

Thou fresh piece
Of excellent witchcraft, who of force must know
The royal fool thou cop'st with. Shak. Wint. Tale.

Thou art e'en as just a man,
As e'er my conversation cop'd withal. Shak. Hamlet.

To* COPE. v. a. To embrace. Not in use.

I will make him tell the tale anew;
Where, how, how oft, how long ago, and when,
He hath, and is again to cope your wife.
Shakesp. Othello.

CO'PESMATE. n. s. [perhaps for cupsmate, a companion in drinking, or one that dwells under the same cope, for house.] Companion; friend. An old word.

Ne ever staid in place, ne spake to wight,
Till that the fox his copesmate he had found.
Hubberd's Tale.

CO'PIER. n. s. [from copy.]

1. One that copies; a transcriber.

A coin is in no danger of having its characters altered by copiers and transcribers. Addis. on Coins.

2. One that imitates; a plagiary; an imitator.

Without invention a painter is but a copier, and a poet but a plagiary of others. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

Let the faint copier, on old Tiber's shore,
Nor mean the task, each breathing bust explore;
Line after line with painful patience trace,
This Roman grandeur, that Athenian grace.
Tickel.

CO'PING. n. s. [from cope.] The upper tire of masonry which covers the wall.

All these were of costly stones, even from the foundation unto the coping. 1 Kings. vii. 9.

The coping, the modillions, or dentils, make a noble shew by their graceful projections.
Addison's Freeholder.

CO'PIOUS. adj. [copia, Lat.]

1. Plentiful; abundant; exuberant; in great quantities.

Rose, as in dance, the stately trees, and spread
Their branches hung with copious fruit. Milton.

Full measure only bounds
Excess, before the all-bounteous king, who show'r'd
With copious hand, rejoicing in their joy. Milton.

This alkaline acrimony indicates the copious use of vinegar and acid fruits. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

The tender heart is peace,
And kindly pours its copious treasures forth
In various converse. Thomson's Spring.

2. Abounding in words or images; not barren; not confined; not concise.

Hail, Son of God, Saviour of men! thy name
Shall be the copious matter of my song
Henceforth, and never shall my harp thy praise
Forget, nor from thy Father's praise disjoin.
Milton.

CO'PIOUSLY. adv. [from copious.]

1. Plentifully; abundantly; in great quantities.
2. At large; without brevity or conciseness; diffusely.

These several remains have been so copiously described by abundance of travellers, and other writers, that it is very difficult to make any new discoveries on so beaten a subject. Addison.

CO'PIOUSNESS. n. s. [from copious.]

1. Plenty; abundance; great quantity; exuberance.
2. Diffusion; exuberance of style.

The Roman orator endeavoured to imitate the copiousness of Homer, and the Latin poet made it his business to reach the conciseness of Demosthenes. Dryden.

CO'PIST. n. s. [from copy.] A copier; a transcriber; an imitator.

CO'PLAND. n. s. A piece of ground in which the land terminates with an acute angle. Dict.

CO'PPED. adj. [from cop.] Rising to a top or head.

It was broad in its basis, and rose copped like a sugar-loaf. Wiseman's Surgery.

A galeated eschinus being copped and somewhat conic. Woodward.

CO'PPEL. n. s. [This word is variously spelt; as copel, cupel, cuple, and cupple; but I cannot find its etymology.] An instrument used in chymistry, in the form of a dish, made of ashes, well washed, to cleanse them from all their salt; or of bones thoroughly calcined. Its use is to try and purify gold and silver, which is done by mingling lead with the metal, and exposing it in the coppel to a violent fire a long while. The impurities of the metal will then be carried off in dross, which is called the litharge of gold and silver. The refiners call the coppel a test. Harris.

CO'PPER. n. s. [koper, Dut. cuprum, Lat.] One of the six primitive metals.

Copper is the most ductile and malleable metal, after gold and silver. Of a mixture of copper and lapis calaminaris is formed brass; a composition of copper and tin makes bell-metal; and copper and brass, melted in equal quantities, produces what the French call bronze, used for figures and statues. Chambers.

Copper is heavier than iron or tin; but lighter than silver, lead, and gold. Hill on Fossils.

Two vessels of fine copper, precious as gold.
Ezra, viii. 27.

CO'PPER. n. s. A vessel made of copper: commonly used for a boiler larger than a moveable pot.

They boiled it in a copper to the half; then they poured it into earthen vessels.
Bacon's Natural History.

COPPER-NOSE. n. s. [copper and nose.] A red nose.

He having colour enough, and the other higher, is too flaming a praise for a good complexion: I had as lieve Helen's golden tongue had commended Troilus for a copper-nose. Shakesp.

Gutta rosacea ariseth in little hard tubercles, affecting the face all over with great itching, which being scratched, looks red, and rises in great welks, rendering the visage fiery; and makes copper-noses, as we generally express them. Wiseman.

COPPER-PLATE. n. s. A plate on which pictures are engraven for the neater impression, distinguished from a wooden cut.

COPPER-WORK. n. s. [copper and work.] A place where copper is worked or manufactured.

COPPERAS. n. s. [kopperoose, Dut. couperouse, Fr. supposed to be found in copper mines only.] A name given to three sorts of vitriol; the green, the bluish green, and the white, which are produced in the mines of Germany, Hungary, and other countries. But what is commonly sold here for copperas, is an artificial vitriol, made of a kind of stones found on the sea-shore in Essex, Hampshire, and so westward, ordinarily called gold stones from their colour. They abound with iron, and are exposed to the weather in beds above ground, and receive the rains and dews, which in time breaks and dissolves the stones: the liquor that runs off is pumped into boilers, in which is first put old iron, which, in boiling, dissolves. This factitious copperas, in many respects, agrees with the native green vitriol. Chambers. Hill.

It may be questioned, whether, in this operation, the iron or copperas be transmuted, from the cognation of copperas with copper, and the iron remaining after conversion. Brown.

COPPERSMITH. n. s. [copper and smith.] One that manufactures copper.

Salmoneus, as the Grecian tale is,
Was a mad coppersmith of Elis;
Up at his forge by morning peep. Swift.

COPPERWORM. n. s. [teredo, Lat.]

1. A little worm in ships.
2. A worm that fretteth garments.
3. A worm breeding in one's hand. Ainsworth.

COPPERY. adj. [from copper.] Containing copper; made of copper.

Some springs of Hungary, highly impregnated with vitriolick salts, dissolve the body of iron put into the spring, and deposite, in lieu of the irony particles carried off, coppery particles brought with the water out of the neighbouring copper-mines. Woodward on Fossils.

COPPICE. n. s. [coupeaux, Fr. from couper to cut or lop. It is often written copse.] Low woods cut at stated times for fuel; a place over-run with brushwood.

A land, each side whereof was bounded both with high timber trees, and copses of far more humble growth. Sidney.

Upon the edge of yonder coppice,
A stand, where you may have the fairest shoot. Shakesp.

In coppice woods, if you leave staddles too thick, they run to bushes and briars, and have little clean underwood. Bacon.

The willows, and the hazel copses green,
Shall now no more be seen
Fanning their joyous leaves to their soft lays. Milt.

Raise trees in your seminaries and nurseries, and you may transplant them for coppice ground, walks, or hedges. Mortimer's Husbandry.

The rate of coppice lands will fall upon the discovery of coal-mines. Locke.

COPPLE-DUST. n. s. [probably for coppel, or cupel dust.] Powder used in purifying metals, or the gross parts separated by the cupel.

It may be also tried by incorporating powder of steel, or copper-dust, by pouncing into the quicksilver. Bacon.

COPPLE-STONES are lumps and fragments of stone or marble, broke from the adjacent cliffs, rounded by being bowled and tumbled to and again by the action of the water. Woodward.

COPPLED. adj. [from cop.] Rising in a conick form; rising to a point.

There is some difference in this shape, some being flatter on the top, others more coppled. Woodward on Fossils.

COPSE. n. s. [abbreviated from coppice.] Short wood cut at a certain growth for fuel; a place overgrown with short wood.

The east quarters of the shire are not destitute of copse woods. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

Oaks and brambles, if the copse be burn'd,
Confounded lie, to the same ashes turn'd. Waller.

But in what quarter of the copse it lay,
His eye by certain level could survey. Dryd. Fab.

To COPSE. v. a. [from the noun.] To preserve underwoods.

The neglect of copsing wood cut down, hath been of very evil consequence. Swift's Address to Parliament.

COPULA. n. s. [Lat.] The word which unites the subject and predicate of a proposition; as, books are dear.

The copula is the form of a proposition; it represents the act of the mind, affirming or denying. Watts's Logick.

To COPULATE. v. a. [copulo, Lat.] To unite; to conjoin; to link together.

If the force of custom, simple and separate, be great, the force of custom copulate, and conjoined, and collegiate, is far greater. Bacon.

To COPULATE. v. n. To come together as different sexes.

Not only the persons so copulating are infected, but also their children. Wiseman's Surgery.

COPULATION. n. s. [from copulate] The congress or embrace of the two sexes.

Sundry kinds, even of conjugal copulation, are prohibited as unhonest. Hooker.

COPULATIVE. adj. [copulativus, Lat.] A term of grammar.

Copulative propositions are those which have more subjects or predicates connected by affirmative or negative conjunctions: as, riches and honours are temptations to pride; Cæsar conquered the Gauls and the Britons; neither gold nor jewels will purchase immortality. Watts's Logick.

COPY. n. s. [copie, Fr. copia, low Lat. quod cuipiam facta est copia exscribendi. Junius inclines, after his manner, to derive it from κόπος labour; because, says he, to copy another's writing is very painful and laborious.]

1. A transcript from the archetype or original.

If virtue's self were lost, we might
From your fair mind new copies write. Waller.

I have not the vanity to think my copy equal to the original. Denham.

He stept forth, not only the copy of God's hands, but also the copy of his perfections, a kind of image or representation of the Deity in small. South's Sermons.

The Romans having sent to Athens, and the Greek cities of Italy, for copies of the best laws, chose ten legislators to put them into form. Swift.

2. An individual book; one of many books: as, a good or fair copy.

The very having of the books of God was a matter of no small charge, as they could not be had otherwise than in written copies. Hooker.

3. The autograph; the original; the archetype; that from which any thing is copied.

It was the copy of our conference;
In bed he slept not, for my urging it;
At board he fed not, for my urging it. Shakesp. Comedy of Errours.

Let him first learn to write, after a copy, all the letters in the vulgar alphabet. Holder's Elem. of Sp.

The first of them I have forgotten, and cannot easily retrieve, because the copy is at the press. Dryden.

4. An instrument by which any conveyance is made in law.

Thou know'st that Banquo and his Fleance lives;
But in them nature's copy 's not eternal. Shak. Mac.

5. A picture drawn from another picture.

COPY-BOOK. n. s. [copy and book.] A book in which copies are written for learners to imitate.

COPY-HOLD. n. s. [copy and hold.] A tenure, for which the tenant hath nothing to shew but the copy of the rolls made by the steward of his lord's court: for the steward, as he enrolls other things done in the lord's court, so he registers such tenants as are admitted in the court, to any parcel of land or tenement belonging to the manor; and the transcript of this is called the court roll, the copy of which the tenant takes from him, and keeps as his only evidence. This is called a base tenure, because it holds at the will of the lord; yet not simply, but according to the custom of the manor: so that if a copy-holder break not the custom of the manor, and thereby forfeit his tenure, he cannot be turned out at the lord's pleasure. These customs of manors vary, in one point or other, almost in every manor. Some copy-holds are finable, and some certain: that which is finable, the lord rates at what fine or income he pleases, when the tenant is admitted into it; that which is certain, is a kind of inheritance, and called in many places customary; because the tenant dying, and the hold being void, the next of blood paying the customary fine, as two shillings for an acre, or so, cannot be denied his admission. Some copy-holders have, by custom, the wood growing upon their own land, which by law they could not have. Some hold by the verge in ancient demesne; and though they hold by copy, yet are they, in account, a kind of freeholder; for, if such a one commit felony, the king hath annum, diem, and vastum, as in case of freehold. Some others hold by common tenure, called mere copy-hold; and, they committing felony, their land escheats to the lord of the manor. Cowell.

If a customary tenant die, the widow shall have what the law calls her free bench in all his copy-hold lands. Addison.

COPY-HOLDER. n. s. [from copyhold.] One that is possessed of land in copyhold.

To CO'PY. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To transcribe; to write after an original: it has sometimes out, a kind of pleonasm.

He who hurts a harmless neighbour's peace,
Who loves a lye, lame slander helps about,
Who writes a libel, or who copies out. Pope's Epist.

2. To imitate; to propose to imitation; to endeavour to resemble.

He that borrows other men's experience, with this design of copying it out, possesses himself of one of the greatest advantages. Decay of Piety.

Set the examples, and their souls inflame
To copy out their great forefathers fame.
Dryden's King Arthur.

To copy her few nymphs aspir'd,
Her virtues fewer swains admir'd. Swift.

To CO'PY. v. n.

1. To do any thing in imitation of something else.

Some imagine, that whatsoever they find in the picture of a master, who has acquired reputation, must of necessity be excellent; and never fail, when they copy, to follow the bad as well as the good things. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

2. It has sometimes from before the thing imitated.

When a painter copies from the life, he has no privilege to alter features and lineaments, under pretence that his picture will look better. Dryden.

3. Sometimes after.

Several of our countrymen, and Mr. Dryden in particular, seem very often to have copied after it in their dramatick writings, and in their poems upon love. Addison's Spectator.

To COQUE'T. v. a. [from the noun.] To entertain with compliments and amorous tattle; to treat with an appearance of amorous tenderness.

You are coquetting a maid of honour, my lord looking on to see how the gamesters play, and I railing at you both. Swift.

To COQUE'T. v. n. To act the lover; to entice by blandishments.

Phyllis, who but a month ago
Was married to the Tunbridge beau,
I saw coquetting t' other night,
In publick, with that odious knight. Swift.

COQUE'TRY. n. s. [coqueterie, Fr.] Affectation of amorous advances; desire of attracting notice.

I was often in company with a couple of charming women, who had all the wit and beauty one could desire in female companions, without a dash of coquetry, that from time to time gave me a great many agreeable torments. Addison's Spectator.

COQUE'TTE. n. s. [coquette, Fr. from coquart a prattler.] A gay, airy girl; a girl who endeavours to attract notice.

The light coquettes in sylphs aloft repair,
And sport and flutter in the fields of air. Pope.

A coquette and a tinder-box are spark-led.
Arbuthnot and Pope.

CO'RACLE. n. s. [cwrwgle, Welsh, probably from corium leather, Lat.] A boat used in Wales by fishers, made by drawing leather or oiled cloth upon a frame of wicker work.

CO'RAL. n. s. [corallium, Lat.]

1. Red coral is a plant of as great hardness and stony nature, while growing in the water, as it has after long exposure to the air. The vulgar opinion, that coral is soft while in the sea, proceeds from a soft and thin coat, of a crustaceous matter, covering it while it is growing, and which is taken off before it is packed up for use. The whole coral plant grows to a foot or more in height, and is variously ramified. It is thickest at the stem, and its branches grow gradually smaller. It grows to stones, without a root, or without any way penetrating them; but as it is found to grow, and take in its nourishment, in the manner of plants, and to produce flowers and seeds, or at least a matter analogous to seeds, it properly belongs to the vegetable kingdom. Hill's Mat. Med.

In the sea, upon the south-west of Sicily, much coral is found. It is a submarine plant; it hath no leaves; it brancheth only when it is under water. It is soft, and green of colour; but being brought into the air, it becometh hard and shining red, as we see. Bacon's Natural History.

This gentleman, desirous to find the nature of coral, caused a man to go down a hundred fathom into the sea, with express orders to take notice whether it were hard or soft in the place where it groweth. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

He hears the crackling sound of coral woods,
And sees the secret source of subterranean floods.
Dryden's Virgil.

A turret was inclos'd
Within the wall, of alabaster white,
And crimson coral, for the queen of night,
Who takes in Sylvan sports her chaste delight.
Dryden.

Or where 's the sense, direct or moral,
That teeth are pearl, or lips are coral? Prior.

2. The piece of coral which children have about their necks, imagined to assist them in breeding teeth.

Her infant grandame's coral next it grew;
The bells she gingled, and the whistle blew. Pope.

CORAL-TREE. n. s. [corallodendron, Lat.] It is a native of America, and produces very beautiful scarlet flowers; but never any seeds in the European gardens. Miller.

CO'RALLINE, adj. [corallinus, Lat.] Consisting of coral; approaching to coral.

At such time as the sea is agitated, it takes up into itself terrestrial matter of all kinds, and in particular the coralline matter, letting it fall again, as it becomes calm. Woodward.

CO'RALLINE. n. s. [from the adjective.] Coralline is a sea plant used in medicine; but much inferior to the coral in hardness, sometimes greenish, sometimes yellowish, often reddish, and frequently white. Hill.

In Falmouth there is a sort of sand, or rather coralline, that lies under the owse. Mortim. Husb.

CO'RALLOID. } adj. [κοραλλοειδης.] Re-
CO'RALLOIDAL. } sembling coral.

Now that plants and ligneous bodies may indurate under water, without approachment of air, we have experiment in coralline, with many coralloidal concretions. Brown.

The pentadrous, columnar, coralloid bodies, that are composed of plates set lengthways of the body, and passing from the surface to the axis of it. Woodward on Fossils.

CORA'NT. n. s. [courant, Fr.] A lofty sprightly dance.

It is harder to dance a corant well than a jig; so in conversation, even, easy, and agreeable, more than points of wit. Temple.

I would as soon believe a widow in great grief for her husband, because I saw her dance a corant about his coffin. Walsh.

CO'RBAN. n. s. [קרבן] An alms-basket; a receptacle of charity; a gift; an alms.

They think to satisfy all obligations to duty by their corban of religion. King Charles.

Corban stands for an offering or gift made to God, or his temple. The Jews sometimes swore by corban, or the gifts offered unto God. If a man made all his fortune corban, or devoted it to God, he was forbidden to use it. If all that he was to give his wife, or his father and mother, was declared corban, he was no longer permitted to allow them necessary subsistence. Even debtors were permitted to defraud their creditors, by consecrating their debt to God. Our Saviour reproaches the Jews, in the Gospel, with these uncharitable and irreligious vows. By this word such persons were likewise meant, as devoted themselves to the service of God and his temple. Corban signifies also the treasury of the temple, where the offerings, which were made in money, were deposited. Calmet.

CORBE. adj. [courbe, Fr.] Crooked.

For siker thy head very tottie is,
So thy corbe shoulder it leans amiss.
Spenser's Pastorals.

CO'RBEILS. n. s. Little baskets used in fortification, filled with earth, and set upon the parapet, to shelter the men in firing upon the besiegers.

CO'RBEL. n. s. [In architecture.] The representation of a basket, sometimes placed on the heads of the caryatides.

CO'RBEL. }
CO'RBIL. } n. s.

1. A short piece of timber sticking out six or eight inches from a wall, sometimes placed for strength under the semigirders of a platform.

2. A niche or hollow left in walls for figures or statues. Chambers.

CORD. n. s. [cort, Welsh; chorda, Lat.; corde, Fr.]

1. A rope; a string composed of several strands or twists.

She let them down by a cord through the window. Jos. ii. 5.

Form'd of the finest complicated thread,
These num'rous cords are thro' the body spread.
Blackmore.

2. The cords extended in setting up tents, furnish several metaphors in scripture.

Thine eyes shall see Jerusalem a quiet habitation, a tabernacle that shall not be taken down, none of the stakes thereof shall ever be removed, neither shall any of the cords thereof be broken. Isaiah, xxxiii. 20.

3. A quantity of wood for fuel, supposed to be measured with a cord; a pile eight feet long, four high, and four broad.

CORD-MAKER. n. s. [cord and make.] One whose trade is to make ropes; a ropemaker.

CORD-WOOD. n. s. [cord and wood.] Wood piled up for fuel, to be sold by the cord.

To CORD. v. a. [from the noun.] To bind with ropes; to fasten with cords; to close by a bandage.

CO'RDAGE. n. s. [from cord.] A quantity of cords; the ropes of a ship.

Our cordage from her store, and cables, should be made,
Of any in that kind most fit for marine trade.
Drayton.

They fastened their ships, and rid at anchor with cables of iron chains, having neither canvas nor cordage. Raleigh.

Spain furnished a sort of rush called spartum, useful for cordage and other parts of shipping. Arbuthnot on Coins.

CO'RDED. adj. [from cord.] Made of ropes.
This night he meaneth, with a corded ladder,
To climb celestial Silvia's chamber window. Shak.

CORDELI'ER. n. s. A Franciscan friar: so named from the cord which serves him for a cincture.
And who to assist but a grave cordelier. Prior.

CO'RDIAL. n. s. [from cor the heart, Lat.]
1. A medicine that increases the force of the heart, or quickens the circulation.
2. Any medicine that increases strength.
A cordial, properly speaking, is not always what increaseth the force of the heart; for, by increasing that, the animal may be weakened, as in inflammatory diseases. Whatever increaseth the natural or animal strength, the force of moving the fluids and muscles, is a cordial: these are such substances as bring the serum of the blood into the properest condition for circulation and nutrition; as broths made of animal substances, milk, ripe fruits, and whatever is endued with a wholesome but not pungent taste. Arbuthnot on Aliments.
3. Any thing that comforts, gladdens, and exhilarates.
Then with some cordials seek for to appease
The inward languor of my wounded heart,
And then my body shall have shortly ease;
But such sweet cordials pass physicians art. Spenser.
Cordials of pity give me now,
For I too weak for purges grow. Cowley.
Your warrior offspring that upheld the crown,
The scarlet honour of your peaceful gown,
Are the most pleasing objects I can find,
Charms to my sight, and cordials to my mind.
Dryden.

CO'RDIAL. adj.
1. Reviving; invigorating; restorative.
It is a thing I make, which hath the king
Five times redeem'd from death: I do not know
What is more cordial. Shakesp. Cymbeline.
He only took cordial waters, in which we infused sometimes purgatives. Wiseman's Surgery.
2. Sincere; hearty; proceeding from the heart; without hypocrisy.
Doctrines are infused among christians, which are apt to obstruct or intercept the cordial superstructing of Christian life of renovation, where the foundation is duly laid. Hammond.
He, with looks of cordial love,
Hung over her enamour'd. Milton.

CO'RDIALITY. n. s. [from cordial.]
1. Relation to the heart.
That the antients had any such respects of cordiality, or reference unto the heart, will much be doubted. Brown.
2. Sincerity; freedom from hypocrisy.

CO'RDIALLY. adv. [from cordial.] Sincerely; heartily; without hypocrisy.
Where a strong inveterate love of sin has made any doctrine or proposition wholly unsuitable to the heart, no argument, or demonstration, no nor miracle whatsoever, shall be able to bring the heart cordially to close with, and receive it. South's Serm.

CO'RDINER. n. s. [cordonnier, Fr.] A shoemaker. It is so used in divers statutes.

CO'RDON. n. s. [Fr.] In fortification, a row of stones jutting out before the rampart and the basis of the parapet. Chambers.

CO'RDWAIN. n. s. [Cordovan leather, from Cordova in Spain.] Spanish leather.
Her straight legs most bravely were embay'd
In golden buskins of costly cordwain. Fairy Queen.

CORDWA'INER. n. s. [uncertain whether from Cordovan, Spanish leather, or from cord, of which shoes were formerly made, and are now used in the Spanish West Indies. Trevoux.] A shoemaker.

CORE. n. s. [cœur, Fr.; cor, Lat.]
1. [illegible]
Give me that man
That is not passion's slave, and I will wear him
In my heart's core; ay, in my heart of heart.
Shakesp. Hamlet.
2. The inner part of any thing.
In the core of the square she raised a tower of a furlong high. Raleigh's History of the World.
Dig out the cores below the surface. Mort. Husb.
They wasteful eat,
Through buds and bark, into the blacken'd core.
Thomson.
3. The inner part of a fruit which contains the kernels.
It is reported that trees, watered perpetually with warm water, will make a fruit with little or no core or stone. Bacon.
4. The matter contained in a boil or sore.
Launce the sore,
And cut the head; for, till the core be found,
The secret vice is fed, and gathers ground.
Dryden's Virgil.
5. It is used by Bacon for a body or collection. [from corps, Fr. pronounced core.]
He was more doubtful of the raising of forces to resist the rebels, than of the resistance itself; for that he was in a core of people whose affections he suspected. Bacon's Henry VII.

CORIA'CEOUS. adj. [coriaceus, Lat.]
1. Consisting of leather.
2. Of a substance resembling leather.
A stronger projectile motion of the blood must occasion greater secretions and loss of liquid parts, and from thence perhaps spissitude and coriaceous concretions. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

CORIA'NDER. n. s. [coriandrum, Lat.] A plant.
The species are, 1. Greater coriander. 2. Smaller testiculated coriander. The first is cultivated for the seeds, which are used in medicine: the second sort is seldom found. Miller.
Israel called the name thereof manna; and it was, like coriander seed, white. Exodus, xiii. 31.

CO'RINTH. n. s. [from the city of that name in Greece.] A small fruit, commonly called currant.
Now will the corinths, now the rasps supply
The chief riches of Zant consist in corinths, which the inhabitants have in great quantities. Broome.

CORI'NTHIAN Order, is generally reckoned the fourth, but by some the fifth, of the five orders of architecture; and is the most noble, rich, and delicate of them all. Vitruvius ascribes it to Callimachus, a Corinthian sculptor, who is said to have taken the hint by passing by the tomb of a young lady, over which a basket with some of her playthings had been placed by her nurse, and covered with a tile; the whole having been placed over a root of acanthus. As it sprung up, the branches encompassed the basket; but arriving at the tile, bent downwards under the corners of it, forming a kind of volute. Hence Calimachus imitated the basket by the vase of his capital, the tile in the abacus, and the leaves in the volute. Villalpandus imagines the Corinthian capital to have taken its original from an order in the temple of Solomon, whose leaves were those of the palm-tree. The capital is adorned with two rows of leaves, between which little stalks arise, of which the sixteen volutes are formed, which support the abacus. Harris.
Behind these figures are large columns of the Corinthian order, adorned with fruit and flowers. Dryden.

CORK. n. s. [cortex, Lat. korck, Dut.
Hic dies, anno redeunte, festus
Corticem astrictum pice dimovebit
Amphoræ fumum bibere institutæ
Consule Tullo. Hor.]
1. A glandiferous tree, in all respects like the ilex, excepting the bark, which, in the cork tree, is thick, spongy, and soft. Miller.
The cork tree grows near the Pyrenean hills, and in several parts of Italy, and the north of New England. Mortimer.
2. The bark of the cork tree used for stopples, or burnt into Spanish black. It is taken off without injury to the tree.
3. A piece of cork cut for the stopple of a bottle or barrel.
I pr'ythee take the cork out of thy mouth, that I may drink thy tidings. Shakesp. As you like it.
Be sure, nay very sure, thy cork be good;
Then future ages shall of Peggy tell,
That nymph that brew'd and bottled ale so well.
King.
Nor stop, for one bad cork, his butler's pay. Pope.

CORKING-PIN. n. s. A pin of the largest size.
When you put a clean pillow-case on your lady's pillow, be sure to fasten it well with three corking-pins, that it may not fall off in the night.
Swift's Directions to the Chambermaid.

CO'RKY. adj. [from cork.] Consisting of cork; resembling cork.
Bind fast his corky arms. Shakesp. King Lear.

CO'RMORANT. n. s. [cormorant, Fr. from corvus marinus, Lat.]
1. A bird that preys upon fish. It is nearly of the bigness of a capon, with a wry bill and broad feet, black on his body, but greenish about his wings. He is eminently greedy and rapacious.
Let fame, that all hunt after in their lives,
Live register'd upon our brazen tombs;
When, spite of cormorant devouring time,
Th' endeavour of this present breath may buy
That honour which shall 'bate his scythe's keen edge. Shakesp.
Those called birds of prey, as the eagle, hawk, puttock, and cormorant. Peacham on Drawing.
Thence up he flew, and on the tree of life
Sat like a cormorant. Milton's Paradise Lost.
Not far from thence is seen a lake, the haunt
Of coots, and of the fishing cormorant. Dryd. Fab.
2. A glutton.

CORN. n. s. [corn, Sax. korn, Germ. It is found in all the Teutonick dialects; as, in an old Runick rhyme,
Hagul er kaldastur corna.
Hail is the coldest grain.]
1. The seeds which grow in ears, not in pods; such as are made into bread.
Except a corn of wheat fall into the ground and die, it abideth alone. John, xii. 25.
The people cry you mock'd them; and, of late,
When corn was given them gratis, you repin'd. Shak.
2. Grain yet unreaped, standing in the field upon its stalk.
All the idle weeds that grow
In our sustaining corn. Shakesp. King Lear.
Landing his men, he burnt the corn all thereabouts, which was now almost ripe.
Knolles's History of the Turks.
Still a murmur runs
Along the soft inclining fields of corn. Thoms. Aut.
3. Grain in the ear, yet unthreshed.
Thou shalt come to thy grave in a full age, like as a shock of corn cometh in his season. Job v. 26.

4. An excrescence on the feet, hard and painful; probably so called from its form; though by some supposed to be denominated from its corneous or horny substance.

Ladies, that have your feet
Unplagu'd with corns, we'll have a bout with you. Shakesp.

The man that makes his toe
What he his heart should make,
Shall of a corn cry woe,
And turn his sleep to wake. Shak. K. Lear.

Even in men, aches and hurts and corns do engrieve either towards rain or towards frost. Bacon's Nat. History.

The hardest part of the corn is usually in the middle, thrusting itself in a nail; whence it has the Latin appellation of clavis. Wiseman.

He first that useful secret did explain,
That pricking corns foretold the gath'ring rain. Gay's Pastorals.

It looks as there were regular accumulations and gatherings of humours, growing perhaps in some people as corns. Arbuthnot.

Thus Lamb, renown'd for cutting corns,
An offer'd fee from Radcliff scorns. Swift.

To CORN. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To salt; to sprinkle with salt. The word is so used, as Skinner observes, by the old Saxons.

2. To granulate.

CORN-FIELD. n. s. A field where corn is growing.

It was a lover and his lass,
That o'er the green corn-field did pass. Shakesp. As you like it.

You may soon enjoy the gallant sights of armies, encampments, and standards waving over your brother's cornfields. Pope.

CORN-FLAG. n. s. [corn and flag.] A plant.

Miller enumerates eleven species of this plant, some with red flowers, and some with white.

CORN-FLOOR. n. s. The floor where corn is stored.

Thou hast loved a reward upon every corn-floor. Hos. IX. 1.

CORN-FLOWER. n. s. [from corn and flower.]

There be certain corn-flowers, which come seldom or never in other places, unless they be set, but only amongst corn; as the blue-bottle, a kind of yellow marygold, wild poppy, and fumitory. Bacon's Natural History.

Corn-flowers are of many sorts: some of them flower in June and July, and others in August. The seeds should be sown in March: they require a good soil. Mortimer.

CORN-LAND. n. s. [corn and land.] Land appropriated to the production of grain.

Pastures and meadows are of such advantage to husbandry, that many prefer them to corn lands. Mortimer's Husbandry.

CORN-MASTER. n. s. [corn and master.] One that cultivates corn for sale. Not in use.

I knew a nobleman in England, that had the greatest audits of any man in my time; a great grasier, a great sheep-master, a great timber-man, a great collier, a great corn-master, and a great leadman. Bacon.

CORN-MARIGOLD. n. s. [from corn and marigold.] A flower.

CORN-MILL. n. s. [corn and mill.] A mill to grind corn into meal.

Save the more laborious work of beating of hemp, by making the axle-tree of the corn-mills longer than ordinary, and placing pins in it to raise large hammers. Mortimer.

CORN-PIPE. n. s. [from corn and pipe.] A pipe made by slitting the joint of a green stalk of corn.

Now the shrill corn-pipes, echoing loud to arms,
To rank and file reduce the straggling swarms. Tickel.

CORN-ROCKET. n. s. [from corn and rocket.] A plant.

CORN-ROSE. n. s. A species of poppy.

CORN-SALLAD. n. s. [from corn and sallad.]

Corn-sallad is an herb, whose top-leaves are a sallet of themselves. Mortimer's Husbandry.

CO'RNAGE. n. s. [from corne, Fr. cornu, Lat.] A tenure which obliges the landholder to give notice of an invasion by blowing a horn.

CO'RNCHANDLER. n. s. [corn and chandler.] One that retails corn.

CO'RNCUTTER. n. s. [from corn and cut.] A man whose profession is to extirpate corns from the foot.

The nail was not loose, nor did seem to press into the flesh; for there had been a corncutter, who had cleared it. Wiseman.

I have known a corncutter, who, with a right education, would have been an excellent physician. Spectator.

CO'RNEL. } CORNE'LIAN-TREE. } n. s. [cornus, Lat.]

The cornel-tree beareth the fruit commonly called the cornel or cornelian cherry, as well from the name of the tree, as the cornelian stone, the colour whereof it somewhat represents. The wood is very durable, and useful for wheel-work. Mortimer.

Take a service-tree, or a cornelian-tree, or an elder-tree, which we know have fruits of harsh and binding juice, and set them near a vine or fig-tree, and see whether the grapes or figs will not be the sweeter. Bacon's Nat. History.

A huntress issuing from the wood,
Reclining on her cornel spear she stood. Dryden.

Mean time the goddess, in disdain, bestows
The mast and acorn, brutal food! and strows
The fruits of cornel, as they feast around.
Pope's Odyssey.

On wildings and on strawberries they fed;
Cornels and bramble-berries gave the rest,
And falling acorns furnish'd out a feast. Dryd. Ovid.

CORNE'LIAN STONE. See CARNELIAN.

CORNEMUSE. n. s. [Fr.] A kind of rustick flute.

CO'RNEOUS. adj. [corneus, Lat.] Horny; of a substance resembling horn.

Such as have corneous or horny eyes, as lobsters, and crustaceous animals, are generally dimsighted. Brown.

The various submarine shrubs are of a corneous or ligneous constitution, consisting chiefly of a fibrous matter. Woodward.

CO'RNER. n. s. [cornel, Welsh; cornier, Fr.]

1. An angle; a place inclosed by two walls or lines, which would intersect each other, if drawn beyond the point where they meet.

2. A secret or remote place.

There 's nothing I have done yet, o' my conscience,
Deserves a corner. Shakesp. Henry VIII.

It is better to dwell in a corner of a house top, than with a brawling woman and in a wide house. Proverbs, XXV. 24.

I am persuaded that none of these things are hidden from him; for this thing was not done in a corner. Acts, XXVI. 26.

All the inhabitants, in every corner of the island, have been absolutely reduced under his immediate subjection. Davies.

Those vices, that lurk in the secret corners of the soul. Addison.

3. The extremities; the utmost limit: thus every corner is the whole or every part.

Might I but through my prison, once a day,
Behold this maid, all corners else o' th' earth
Let liberty make use of. Shakesp. Tempest.

I turn'd, and tried each corner of my bed,
To find if sleep were there; but sleep was lost. Dryd.

CORNER-STONE. n. s. [corner and stone.] The stone that unites the two walls at the corner; the principal stone.

See you yond' coin o' th' capitol, yond corner-stone? Shakesp.

A mason was fitting a corner-stone. Howel's Vocal Forest.

CORNER-TEETH of a Horse, are the fore teeth between the middling teeth and the tushes; two above and two below, on each side of the jaw, which shoot when the horse is four years and a half old. Farrier's Dict.

CO'RNERWISE. adv. [corner and wise.] Diagonally; with the corner in front.

CO'RNET. n. s. [cornette, Fr.]

1. A musical instrument blown with the mouth: used anciently in war, probably in the cavalry.

Israel played before the Lord on psalteries, and on timbrels, and on cornets. 2 Sam. vi. 5.

Other wind instruments require a forcible breath; as trumpets, cornets, and hunter's horns. Bacon's Natural History.

Cornets and trumpets cannot reach his ear;
Under an actor's nose, he 's never near. Dryden's Juvenal.

2. A company or troop of horse; perhaps as many as had a cornet belonging to them. This sense is now disused.

These noblemen were appointed, with some cornets of horse and bands of foot, to put themselves beyond the hill where the rebels were encamped. Bacon.

Seventy great horses lay dead in the field, and one cornet was taken. Hayward.

They discerned a body of five cornets of horse very full, standing in very good order to receive them. Clarendon.

3. The officer that bears the standard of a troop.

4. Cornet of a Horse, is the lowest part of his pastern, that runs round the coffin, and is distinguished by the hair that joins and covers the upper part of the hoof. Farrier's Dict.

5. A scarf anciently worn by Doctors. Dict.

6. A head dress. Dict.

7. Cornet of Paper, is described by Skinner to be a cap of paper, made by retailers for small wares.

CO'RNETTER. n. s. [from cornet.] A blower of the cornet.

So great was the rabble of trumpetters, cornetters, and other musicians, that even Claudius himself might have heard them. Hakewill on Provid.

CO'RNICE. n. s. [corniche, Fr.] The highest projection of a wall or column.

The cornice of the Palazzo Farnese, which makes so beautiful an effect below, when viewed more nearly, will be found not to have its just measures. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

The walls were massy brass, the cornice high

CORNICE Ring. [In gunnery.] The next ring from the muzzle backwards. Chambers.

CO'RNICLE. n. s. [from cornu, Lat.] A little horn.

There will be found, on either side, two black filaments, or membranous strings, which extend unto the long and shorter cornicle, upon protrusion. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

CORNI'CULATE. adj. [from cornu, Lat.] A term in botany.

Corniculate plants are such as produce many distinct and horned pods; and corniculate flowers are such hollow flowers as have on their upper part a kind of spur, or little horn. Chambers.

CORNI'FICK. adj. [from cornu and facio, Lat.] Productive of horns; making horns. Dict.

CORNI'GEROUS. adj. [corniger, Lat.] Horned; having horns.

Nature, in other cornigerous animals, hath placed the horns higher, and reclining; as in bucks. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

CORNUCO'PIÆ. n. s. [Lat.] The horn of plenty; a horn topped with fruits and flowers in the hands of a goddess.

To CORNU'TE. v. a. [cornutus, Lat.] To bestow horns; to cuckold.

CORNU'TED. adj. [cornutus, Lat.] Grafted with horn; horned; cuckolded.

CORNU'TO. n. s. [from cornutus, Lat.] A man horned; a cuckold.

The peaking cornuto, her husband, dwelling in a continual larum of jealousy. Shakesp. Merry Wives of Windsor.

CO'RNY. adj. [from cornu, horn, Lat.]

1. Strong or hard like horn; horny.

Up stood the corny reed,
Embattel'd in her field. Milton's Par. Lost.

2. [from corn.] Producing grain or corn.

Tell me why the ant,
Midst summer's plenty, thinks of winter's want;
By constant journeys careful to prepare
Her stores, and bringing home the corny ear. Prior.

3. Containing corn.

They lodge in habitations not their own,
By their high crops and corny gizzards known. Dryden.

CO'ROLLARY. n. s. [corollarium, Lat. from corolla; finis coronat opus: corollair, Fr.]

1. The conclusion: a corollary seems to be a conclusion, whether following from the premises necessarily or not.

Now since we have considered the malignity of this sin of detraction, it is but a natural corollary, that we enforce our vigilance against it. Government of the Tongue.

As a corollary to this preface, in which I have done justice to others, I owe somewhat to myself. Dryden's Fables, Preface.

2. Surplus.

Bring a corollary,
Rather than want. Shakesp. Tempest.

CORO'NA. n. s. [Lat.] A large flat member of the cornice, so called because it crowns the entablature and the whole order. It is called by workmen the drip. Chambers.

In a cornice the gola or cymatium of the corona, the coping, the modillions or dentels, make a noble shew by their graceful projections. Spect.

CO'RONAL. n. s. [corona, Lat.] A crown; a garland.

Crown ye god Bacchus with a coronal,
And Hymen also crown with wreaths of vine. Spens.

CO'RONAL. adj. Belonging to the top of the head.

A man of about forty-five years of age came to me, with a round tubercle between the sagittal and coronal suture. Wiseman.

CO'RONARY. adj. [coronarius, Lat.]

1. Relating to a crown; seated on the top of the head like a crown.

The basilisk of older times was a proper kind of serpent, not above three palms long, as some account; and differenced from other serpents by advancing his head, and some white marks, or coronary spots, upon the crown. Brown.

2. It is applied in anatomy to arteries, which are fancied to encompass the heart in the manner of a garland.

The substance of the heart itself is most certainly made and nourished by the blood, which is conveyed to it by the coronary arteries. Bentley's Sermons.

CORONA'TION. n. s. [from corona, Lat.]

1. The act or solemnity of crowning a king.

Fortune smiling at her work therein, that a scaffold of execution should grow a scaffold of coronation. Sidney.

Willingly I came to Denmark,
To shew my duty in your coronation. Shak. Haml.

A cough, Sir, which I caught with ringing in the king's affairs upon his coronation day. Shakesp. Henry IV.

Now empress fame had publish'd the renown
Of Sh———'s coronation through the town. Dryden's Macfl.

2. The pomp or assembly present at a coronation.

In pensive thought recal the fancied scene,
See coronations rise on ev'ry green. Pope.

CO'RONER. n. s. [from corona.] An officer whose duty is to enquire, on the part of the king, how any violent death was occasioned; for which purpose a jury is impannelled.

Go thou and seek the coroner, and let him sit o' my uncle; for he 's in the third degree of drink; he 's drowned. Shakesp.

CO'RONET. n. s. [coronetta, Ital. the diminutive of corona a crown.]

1. An inferiour crown worn by the nobility. The coronet of a duke is adorned with strawberry leaves; that of a marquis has leaves with pearls interposed; that of an earl raises the pearls above the leaves; that of a viscount is surrounded with only pearls; that of a baron has only four pearls.

In his livery
Walk'd crowns and coronets; realms and islands were
As plates dropt from his pocket. Shakesp. Antony and Cleopatra.

All the rest are countesses.
——Their coronets say so. Shakesp. Henry VIII.

Nor could our nobles hope their bold attempt,
Who ruin'd crowns, would coronets exempt. Dryd.

Peers and dukes, and all their sweeping train,
And garters, stars, and coronets appear. Pope.

2. An ornamental head-dress, in poetical language.

The rest was drawn into a coronet of gold, richly set with pearl. Sidney.

Under a coronet his flowing hair,
In curls, on either cheek play'd. Milt. Par. Lost.

CO'RPORAL. n. s. [corrupted from caporal, Fr.] The lowest officer of the infantry, whose office is to place and remove the sentinels.

The cruel corp'ral whisper'd in my ear,
Five pounds, if rightly tipt, would set me clear. Gay.

CORPORAL of a Ship. An officer that hath the charge of setting the watches and sentries, and relieving them; who sees that all the soldiers and sailors keep their arms neat and clean, and teaches them how to use them. He has a mate under him. Harris.

CO'RPORAL. adj. [corporel, Fr.] corpus, Lat.]

1. Relating to the body; belonging to the body.

To relief of lazars and weak age,
Of indigent faint souls past corporal toil,
A hundred alms-houses right well supplied. Shakesp. Henry V.

Render to me some corporal sign about her,
More evident than this. Shakesp. Cymbeline.

That God hath been otherwise seen, with corporal eyes, exceedeth the small proportion of my understanding. Raleigh.

Beasts enjoy greater sensual pleasures, and feel fewer corporal pains; and are utter strangers to all those anxious and tormenting thoughts, which perpetually haunt and disquiet mankind. Atterbury.

2. Material; not spiritual. In the present language, when body is used philosophically in opposition to spirit, the word corporeal is used, as, a corporeal being; but otherwise corporal. Corporeal is, having a body; corporal, relating to the body. This distinction seems not ancient.

Whither are they vanish'd?
Into the air; and what seem'd corporal
Melted, as breath, into the wind. Shak. Macbeth.

And from these corporal nutriments, perhaps,
Your bodies may at last turn all to spirit. Milton's Paradise Lost.

CORPORA'LITY. n. s. [from corporal.] The quality of being embodied.

If this light be not spiritual, yet it approacheth nearest unto spirituality; and if it have any corporality, then, of all other, the most subtile and pure. Raleigh's History.

CO'RPORALLY. adv. [from corporal.] Bodily.

The sun is corporally conjoined with basiliscus. Brown.

CO'RPORATE. adj. [from corpus, Lat.]

1. United in a body or community; enabled to act in legal processes as an individual.

Breaking forth like a sudden tempest, he overran all Munster and Connaught, defacing and utterly subverting all corporate towns that were not strongly walled. Spenser on Ireland.

The nobles of Athens being not at this time a corporate assembly, therefore the resentment of the commons was usually turned against particular persons. Swift.

2. General; united.

They answer in a joint and corporate voice,
That now they are at fall. Shakesp. Timon.

CO'RPORATENESS. n. s. [from corporate.] The state of a body corporate; a community. Dict.

CORPORA'TION. n. s. [from corpus, Lat.]

A corporation is a body politick, authorised by the king's charter to have a common seal, one head officer or more, and members, able, by their common consent, to grant or receive, in law, any thing within the compass of their charter: even as one man may do by law all things, that by law he is not forbidden; and bindeth the successors, as a single man binds his executor or heir. Cowell.

Of angels we are not to consider only what they are, and do, in regard of their own being; but that also which concerneth them, as they are linked into a kind of corporation amongst themselves, and of society with men. Hooker.

Of this we find some foot-steps in our law,
Which doth her root from God and nature take;
Ten thousand men she doth together draw,
And of them all one corporation make. Davies.

COR'PORATURE. n. s. [from corpus, Lat.] The state of being embodied. Dict.

CORPO'REAL. adj. [corporeus, Lat.]

1. Having a body; not immaterial; not spiritual. See CORPORAL.

The swiftness of those circles attribute,
Though numberless, to his omnipotence,
That to corporeal substances could add
Speed almost spiritual. Milton's Par. Lost.

Having surveyed the image of God in the soul, we are not to omit those characters that God imprinted upon the body, as much as a spiritual substance could be pictured upon a corporeal. South's Sermons.

God being supposed to be a pure spirit, cannot be the object of any corporeal sense. Tillotson.

The course is finish'd which thy fates decreed,
And thou from thy corporeal poison freed. Dryd. F.

Fix thy corporeal and internal eye
On the young gnat, or new engender'd fly. Prior.

2. It is used by Swift inaccurately for corporal.

I am not in a condition to make a true step even on Aimsbury Downs; and I declare, that a corporeal false step is worse than a political one. Swift.

CORPOREITY. n. s. [from corporeus, Lat.] Materiality; the quality of being embodied; the state of having a body; bodiliness.

Since philosophy affirmeth, that we are middle substances between the soul and the body, they must admit of some corporeity, which supposeth weight or gravity. Brown.

It is the saying of divine Plato, that man is nature's horizon, dividing betwixt the upper hemisphere of immaterial intellects, and this lower of corporeity. Glanville's Scepsis.

The one attributed corporeity to God, and the other shape and figure. Stilling fleet.

CORPORIFICA'TION. n. s. [from corporify.] The act of giving body or palpability.

To* CORPO'RIFY. v. a. [from corpus, Lat.] To embody; to inspissate into body. Not used.

A certain spirituous substance, extracted out of it, is mistaken for the spirit of the world corporified. Boyle.

CORPS. CORPSE. n. s. [corps, Fr. corpus, Lat.]

1. A body.

That lewd ribauld
Laid first his filthy hands on virgin cleene,
To spoil her dainty corse, so fair and sheene,
Of chastity and honour virginal. Spenser.

2. A body, in contempt.

Though plenteous, all too little seems
To stuff this man, this vast unhide-bound corps. Milton.

He looks as man was made, with face erect,
That scorns his brittle corps, and seems asham'd
He's not all spirit. Dryden's Don Sebastian.

3. A carcase; a dead body; a corse.

Not a friend
Greet my poor corps, where my bones shall be thrown. Shakesp.

There was the murder'd corps in covert laid,
And violent death in thousand shapes display'd. Dryden's Fables.

See where the corps of thy dead son approaches. Addison.

The corpse was laid out upon the floor by the emperor's command: he then bid every one light his flambeau, and stand about the dead body. Addison's Guardian.

4. The body, in opposition to the soul.

Cold numbness streight bereaves
Her corps of sense, and th' air her soul receives. Denham.

5. A body of forces.

CO'RPULENCE. CO'RPULENCY. n. s. [corpulentia, Lat.]

1. Bulkiness of body; fleshiness; fulness of flesh.

To what a cumbersome unwieldiness,
And burdenous corpulence, my love had grown. Donne.

It is but one species of corpulency; for there may be bulk without fat, from the great quantity of muscular flesh, the case of robust people. Arbuth. on Alim.

2. Spissitude; grossness of matter.

The musculous flesh serves for the vibration of the tail; the heaviness and corpulency of the water requiring a great force to divide it. Ray on the Creation.

CO'RPULENT. adj. [corpulentus, Lat.] Fleshy; bulky; having great bodily bulk.

We say it is a fleshy stile, when there is much periphrasis, and circuit of words; and when, with more than enough, it grows fat and corpulent. Ben Jonson's Discoveries.

Excess of nourishment is hurtful; for it maketh the child corpulent, and growing in breadth rather than in height. Bacon.

CO'RPUSCLE. n. s. [corpusculum, Lat.] A small body; a particle of matter; an atom; a little fragment.

It will add much to our satisfaction, if those corpuscles can be discovered with microscopes. Newton's Opticks.

Who knows what are the figures of the little corpuscles that compose and distinguish different bodies? Watts's Logick.

CORPU'SCULAR. CORPUSCULA'RIAN. adj. [from corpusculum, Lat.] Relating to bodies; comprising bodies. It is the distinguishing epithet of that philosophy, which attempts the rational solution of all physical appearances by the action of one body upon another.

As to natural philosophy, I do not expect to see any principles proposed, more comprehensive and intelligible than the corpuscularian or mechanical. Boyle.

This may be said, that the modern corpuscularians talk, in most things, more intelligibly than the peripateticks. Bentley.

The mechanical or corpuscular philosophy, though peradventure the eldest, as well as the best in the world, had lain dead for many ages in contempt and oblivion. Bentley.

CO'RRACLE. See CORACLE.

To* CORRA'DE. v. a. [corrado, Lat.] To rub off; to wear away by frequent rubbing; to scrape together.

CORRADIA'TION. n. s. [con and radius, Lat.] A conjunction of rays in one point.

The impression of colour worketh not but by a cone of direct beams, or right lines, whereof the basis is in the object, and the vertical point in the eye; so as there is a corradiation, and conjunction of beams. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

To* CORRE'CT. v. a. [corrigo, correctum, Lat.]

1. To punish; to chastise; to discipline.

Sad accidents, and a state of affliction, is a school of virtue; it corrects levity, and interrupts the confidence of sinning. Taylor.

After he has once been corrected for a lye, you must be sure never after to pardon it in him. Locke on Education.

Children being to be restrained by the parents only in vicious things, a look or nod only ought to correct them when they do amiss. Locke on Education.

2. To amend; to take away faults in writings, life, or things.

This is a defect in the first make of some men's minds, which can scarce ever be corrected afterwards, either by learning or age. Burnet's Theory, Pref.

Correcting Nature, from what actually she is in individuals, to what she ought to be, and what she was created. Dryden.

I writ, because it amused me; I corrected, because it was as pleasant to me to correct as to write. Pope's Preface.

The mind may cool, and be at leisure to attend to its domestick concern: to consider what habit wants to be corrected, and what inclination to be subdued. Rogers.

3. To obviate the qualities of one ingredient by another, or by any method of preparation.

O happy mixture! wherein things contrary do so qualify and correct the one the danger of the other's excess, that neither boldness can make us presume, as long as we are kept under with the sense of our own wretchedness; nor, while we trust in the mercy of God through Christ Jesus, fear be able to tyrannize over us. Hooker.

As, in habitual gout or stone,
The only thing that can be done,
Is to correct your drink and diet,
And keep the inward foe in quiet. Prior.

In cases of acidity, water is the proper drink: its quality of relaxing may be corrected by boiling it with some animal substances; as ivory or hartshorn. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

4. To remark faults.

CORRE'CT. adj. [correctus, Lat.] Revised or finished with exactness; free from faults.

What verse can do, he has perform'd in this,
Which he presumes the most correct of his. Dryden's Aur. Prol.

Always use the most correct editions: various readings will be only troublesome where the sense is complete. Felton.

CORRE'CTION. n. s. [from correct.]

1. Punishment; discipline; chastisement; penalty.

Wilt thou, pupil like
Take thy correction mildly, kiss the rod? Shakesp. Rich. II.

An offensive wife,
That hath enrag'd him on to offer strokes,
As he is striking, holds his infant up,
And hangs resolv'd correction in the arm
That was uprear'd to execution. Shakesp. Henry IV.

We are all but children here under the great master of the family; and he is pleased, by hopes and fears, by mercies and corrections, to instruct us in virtue. Watts.

One fault was too great lenity to her servants, to whom she gave good counsel, but too gentle correction. Arbuthnot.

2. Alteration to a better state; the act of taking away faults; amendment.

Another poet, in another age, may take the same liberty with my writings; if, at least, they live long enough to deserve correction. Dryden's Fables, Preface.

3. That which is substituted in the place of any thing wrong.

Corrections or improvements should be adjoined, by way of note or commentary, in their proper places. Watts.

4. Reprehension; animadversion.

They proceed with judgment and ingenuity, establishing their assertions not only with great solidity, but submitting them also unto the correction of future discovery. Brown.

5. Abatement of noxious qualities, by the addition of something contrary.

To make ambitious, wholesome, do not take
A dram of country's dulness; do not add
Corrections, but as chymists purge the bad. Donne.

CORRE'CTIONER. n. s. [from correction.] One that has been in the house of correction; a jail-bird. This seems to be the meaning in Shakespeare.

I will have you soundly swinged for this, you blue-bottle rogue! you filthy famished correctioner!
Shakesp. Henry IV.

CORRE'CTIVE. adj. [from correct.] Having the power to alter or obviate any bad qualities.

Mulberries are pectoral, corrective of bilious alkali.
Arbuthnot.

CORRE'CTIVE. n. s.

1. That which has the power of altering or obviating any thing amiss.

The hair, wool, feathers, and scales, which all animals of prey do swallow, are a seasonable and necessary corrective, to prevent their greediness from filling themselves with too succulent a food.
Ray on the Creation.

Humanly speaking, and according to the method of the world, and the little correctives supplied by art and discipline, it seldom fails but an ill principle has its course, and nature makes good its blow.
South's Sermons.

2. Limitation; restriction.

There seems to be such an instance in the regiment which the human soul exerciseth in relation to the body, that, with certain correctives and exceptions, may give some kind of explication or adumbration thereof.
Hale's Origin of Mankind.

CORRE'CTLY. adv. [from correct.] Accurately; exactly; without faults.

There are ladies, without knowing what tenses and participles, adverbs and prepositions are, speak as properly and as correctly as most gentlemen who have been bred up in the ordinary methods of grammar schools. Locke on Education.

Such lays as neither ebb nor flow,
Correctly cold, and regularly low.
Pope's Essay on Criticism.

CORRE'CTNESS. n. s. [from correct.] Accuracy; exactness; freedom from faults.

Too much labour often takes away the spirit, by adding to the polishing; so that there remains nothing but a dull correctness, a piece without any considerable faults, but with few beauties.
Dryden's Dufresnoy.

The softness of the flesh, the delicacy of the shape, air, and posture, and the correctness of design, in this statue, are inexpressible.
Addison on Italy.

Late, very late, correctness grew our care,
When the tir'd nation breath'd from civil war.
Pope.

Those pieces have never before been printed from the true copies, or with any tolerable degree of correctness.
Swift.

CORRE'CTOR. n. s. [from correct.]

1. He that amends, or alters, by punishment or animadversion.

How many does zeal urge rather to do justice on some sins, than to forbear all sin! How many rather to be correctors than practisers of religion.
Spratt's Sermons.

With all his faults, he sets up to be an universal reformer and corrector of abuses, and a remover of grievances. Swift.

2. He that revises any thing to free it from faults; as the corrector of the press, that amends the errours committed in printing.

I remember a person, who, by his style and literature, seems to have been the corrector of a hedge press in Little-Britain, proceeding gradually to an author. Swift.

3. In medicine.

Such an ingredient in a composition, as guards against or abates the force of another; as the lixivial salts prevent the grievous vellications of resinous purges, by dividing their particles, and preventing their adhesion to the intestinal membranes; and as spices and carminative seeds assist the operation of some cathartics, by dissipating wind. In making a medicine, such a thing is called a corrector, which destroys or diminishes a quality that could not otherwise be dispensed with; thus turpentines are correctors of quicksilver, by destroying its fluxility, and making it capable of mixture. Quincy.

To CO'RRELATE. v. n. [from con and relatus, Lat.] To have a reciprocal relation, as father and son.

CO'RRELATE. n. s. One that stands in the opposite relation.

It is one thing for a father to cease to be a father, by casting off his son; and another for him to cease to be so, by the death of his son: in this the relation is at an end for want of a correlate.
South.

CORRE'LATIVE. adj. [con and relativus, Lat.] Having a reciprocal relation, so that the existence of one in a particular state depends upon the existence of another.

Father and son, husband and wife, and such other correlative terms, seem nearly to belong one to another. South.

Giving is a relative action, and so requires a correlative to answer it: giving, on one part, transfers no property, unless there be an accepting on the other. South.

CORRE'LATIVENESS. n. s. [from correlative.] The state of being correlative.

CORRE'PTION. n. s. [corripio, correptum, Lat.] Objurgation; chiding; reprehension; reproof.

If we must be talking of other people's faults, let it not be to defame, but to amend them, by converting our detraction into admonition and fraternal correption. Government of the Tongue.

To CORRESPO'ND. v. n. [con and respondeo, Lat.]

1. To suit; to answer; to be proportionate; to be adequate to; to be adapted to; to fit.

The days, if one be compared with another successively throughout the year, are found not to be equal, and will not justly correspond with any artificial or mechanical equal measures of time.
Holder on Time.

Words being but empty sounds, any farther than they are signs of our ideas, we cannot but assent to them, as they correspond to those ideas we have, but no farther than that. Locke.

2. To keep up commerce with another by alternate letters.

CORRESPO'NDENCE. } n. s. [from correspond.]
CORRESPO'NDENCY. }

1. Relation; reciprocal adaptation of one thing to another.

Between the law of their heavenly operations, and the actions of men in this our state of mortality, such correspondence there is as maketh it expedient to know in some sort the one, for the other's more perfect direction. Hooker.

Whatever we fancy, things keep their course; and their habitudes, correspondencies, and relations keep the same to one another. Locke.

2. Intercourse; reciprocal intelligence.

I had discovered those unlawful correspondencies they had used, and engagements they had made to embroil my kingdoms. King Charles.

Sure the villains hold a correspondence
With the enemy, and thus they would betray us.
Denham.

It happens very oddly, that the pope and I should have the same thought much about the same time: my enemies will be apt to say, that we hold a correspondence together, and act by concert in this matter. Addison.

3. Friendship; interchange of offices or civilities.

Let such military persons be assured, and well reputed of, rather than factious and popular; holding also good correspondence with the other great men in the state. Bacon.

CORRESPO'NDENT. adj. [from correspond.] Suitable; adapted; agreeable; answerable.

What good or evil is there under the sun, what action correspondent or repugnant unto the law which God hath imposed upon his creatures, but in or upon it God doth work, according to the law which himself hath eternally purposed to keep. Hooker.

And as five zones th' etherial regions bind,
Five correspondent are to earth assign'd.
Dryd. Ovid.

CORRESPO'NDENT. n. s. One with whom intelligence or commerce is kept up by mutual messages or letters.

He was pleased to command me to send to him, and receive from him all his letters from and to all his correspondents at home and abroad.
Denham's Dedication.

CORRESPO'NSIVE. adj. [from correspond.] Answerable; adapted to any thing.

Priam's six gates i' th' city, with massy staples,
And corresponsive and fulfilling bolts,
Sperre up the sons of Troy.
Shakesp. Troilus and Cressida.

1. [In fortification.] The covert way lying round the whole compass of the fortifications of a place.

2. [In architecture.] A gallery or long isle round about a building, leading to several chambers at a distance from each other. Harris.

There is something very noble in the amphitheatre, though the high wall and corridors that went round it are almost intirely ruined.
Addison on Italy.

CO'RRIGIBLE. adj. [from corrigo, Lat.]

1. That which may be altered or amended.

2. He who is a proper object of punishment; punishable.

He was taken up very short, and adjudged corrigible for such presumptuous language.
Howel's Vocal Forest.

3. Corrective; having the power to correct. Not proper, nor used.

Our bodies are our gardens, to the which our wills are gardeners; so that, if we will either have it steril with idleness, or manured with industry, the power and corrigible authority of this lies in our will. Shakesp. Othello.

CORRI'VAL. n. s. [con and rival.] Rival; competitor.

They had governours commonly out of the two families of the Geraldines and Butlers, both adversaries and corrivals one against the other.
Spenser on Ireland.

He, that doth redeem her thence, might wear
Without corrival all her dignities. Shak. H. IV.

CORRI'VALRY. n. s. [from corrival.] Competition; opposition.

CORRO'BORANT. adj. [from corroborate.] Having the power to give strength.

There be divers sorts of bracelets fit to comfort the spirits; and they be of three intentions, refrigerant, corroborant, and aperient.
Bacon's Nat. Hist.

To CORROBORATE. v. a. [con and roboro, Lat.]

1. To confirm; to establish.

Machiavel well noteth, though in an ill-favoured instance, there is no trusting to the force of nature, nor to the bravery of words, except it be corroborate by custom. Bacon.

2. To strengthen; to make strong.

To fortify imagination there be three ways; the authority whence the belief is derived, means to quicken and corroborate the imagination, and means to repeat it and refresh it. Bacon.

It was said that the prince himself had, by the sight of foreign courts, and observations on the different natures of people, and rules of government, much excited and awaked his spirits, and corroborated his judgment. Wotton.

As any limb well and duly exercised grows stronger, the nerves of the body are corroborated thereby. Watts.

CORROBORA'TION. n. s. [from corroborate.] The act of strengthening or confirming; confirmation by some additional security; addition of strength.

The lady herself procured a bull, for the better corroboration of the marriage. Bacon's Henry VII.

CORRO'BORATIVE. adj. [from corroborate.] Having the power of increasing strength.

In the cure of an ulcer, with a moist intemperies, as the heart is weakened by too much humidity, you are to mix corroboratives of an astringent faculty; and the ulcer also requireth to be dried. Wiseman's Surgery.

To* CORRO'DE. v. a. [corrodo, Lat.] To eat away by degrees, as a menstruum; to prey upon; to consume; to wear away gradually.

Statesmen purge vice with vice, and may corrode
The bad with bad, a spider with a toad;
For so ill thralls not them, but they tame ill,
And make her do much good against her will.
Donne.

We know that aqua-fortis corroding copper, which is it that gives the colour to verdigrease, is wont to reduce it to a green-blue solution. Boyle on Colours.

The nature of mankind, left to itself, would soon have fallen into dissolution, without the incessant and corroding invasions of so long a time. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

Hannibal the Pyreneans past,
And steepy Alps, the mounds that nature cast;
And with corroding juices, as he went,
A passage through the living rock he rent.
Dryden's Juvenal.

Fishes, which neither chew their meat, nor grind it in their stomachs, do by a dissolvent liquor there provided, corrode and reduce it into a chylus. Ray on the Creation.

The blood turning acrimonious, corrodes the vessels, producing almost all the diseases of the inflammatory kind. Arbuthnot.

Should jealousy its venom once diffuse,
Corroding every thought, and blasting all
Love's paradise. Thomson's Spring.

CORRO'DENT. adj. [from corrode.] Having the power of corroding or wasting any thing away.

CORRODIBI'LITY. n. s. [from corrodible.] The quality of being corrosible; possibility to be consumed by a menstruum.

CORRO'DIBLE. adj. [from corrode.] Possible to be consumed or corroded.

Metals, although corrodible by waters, yet will not suffer a liquation from the powerfullest heat communicable unto that element. Brown's Vulg. Err.

CO'RRODY. n. s. [from corrodo, Lat.] A defalcation from an allowance or salary, for some other than the original purpose.

Besides these floating burgesses of the ocean, there are certain flying citizens of the air, which prescribe for a corrody therein. Carew.

In those days even noble persons; and other meaner men, ordered corrodies and pensions to their chaplains and servants out of churches. Ayliffe's Parergon.

CORRO'SIBLE. adj. [from corrode.] Possible to be consumed by a menstruum. This ought to be corrodible.

CORRO'SIBLENESS. n. s. [from corrosible.] Susceptiblity of corrosion: rather corrodibility. Dict.

CORRO'SION. n. s. [corrodo, Lat.] The power of eating or wearing away by degrees.

Corrosion is a particular species of dissolution of bodies, either by an acid or a saline menstruum. It is almost wholly designed for the resolution of bodies most strongly compacted, as bones and metals; so that the menstruums here employed have a considerable moment or force. These liquors, whether acid or urinous, are nothing but salts dissolved in a little phlegm; therefore these being solid, and consequently containing a considerable quantity of matter, do both attract one another more, and are also more attracted by the particles of the body to be dissolved: so when the more solid bodies are put into saline menstruums, the attraction is stronger than in other solutions; and the motion, which is always proportional to the attraction, is more violent: so that we may easily conceive, when the motion is in such a manner increased, it should drive the salts into the pores of the bodies, and open and loosen their cohesion, though ever so firm. Quincy.

A kind of poison worketh either by corrosion, or by a secret malignity and enmity to nature. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

That corrosion and dissolution of bodies, even the most solid and durable, which is vulgarly ascribed to the air, is caused merely by the action of water upon them; the air being so far from injuring and preying upon the bodies it environs, that it contributes to their security and preservation. Woodward.

CORRO'SIVE. adj. [from corrodo, Lat. It was anciently pronounced with the accent on the first syllable, now indifferently.]

1. Having the power of consuming or wearing away.

Gold, after it has been divided by corrosive liquors into invisible parts, yet may presently be precipitated, so as to appear again in its own form. Grew's Cosmologia.

The sacred sons of vengeance, on whose course
Corrosive famine waits, and kills the year.
Thomson's Spring.

2. Having the quality to fret or vex.

If the maintenance of ceremonies be a corrosive to such as oppugn them, undoubtedly to such as maintain them it can be no great pleasure, when they behold that which they reverence is oppugned. Hooker.

CORRO'SIVE. n. s.

But stay, I smell a man of middle earth;
With trial fire touch me his finger-end;
If he be chaste, the flame will back descend,
And turn him to no pain; but if he start,
It is the flesh of a corrupted heart.
Shakesp. Merry Wives of Windsor.

Language being the conduit whereby men convey their knowledge, he that makes an ill use of it, though he does not corrupt the fountains of knowledge, which are in things, yet he stops the pipes. Locke.

Hear the black trumpet thro' the world proclaim,
That not to be corrupted is the shame. Pope.

3. To spoil; to do mischief.

To* CORRU'PT. v. a. To become putrid; to grow rotten; to putrefy; to lose purity.

The aptness or propension of air or water to corrupt or putrefy, no doubt, is to be found before it break forth into manifest effects of diseases, blasting, or the like. Bacon.

CORRU'PT. adj. [from To corrupt.]

I shall thee give yond' cosset for thy pain. Spens.

COST. n. s. [kost, Dut. As this word is found in the remotest Teutonick dialects, even in the Islandick, it is not probably derived to us from the Latin consto; though it is not unlikely that the French couster comes from the Latin.]

1. The price of any thing.
2. Sumptuousness; luxury.

The city woman bears
The cost of princes on unworthy shoulders. Shak.
Let foreign princes vainly boast
The rude effects of pride and cost
Of vaster fabricks, to which they Contribute nothing but the pay. Waller.

3. Charge; expence.

While he found his daughter maintained without his cost, he was content to be deaf to any noise of infamy. Sidney.

I shall never hold that man my friend,
Whose tongue shall ask me for one penny cost
To ransom home revolted Mortimer. Shak. H IV.

Have we eaten at all of the king's cost? or hath he given us any gift? 2 Samuel, xix. 42.

And wilt thou, O cruel boast!
Put poor nature to such cost?
O! 'twill undo our common mother,
To be at charge of such another. Crashaw

It is strange to see any ecclesiastical pile, not by ecclesiastical cost and influence, rising above ground; especially in an age in which men's mouths are open against the church, but their hands shut towards it. South's Sermons.

He whose tale is best, and pleases most,
Should win his supper at our common cost.
Dryden's Fables

Fourteen thousand pounds are paid by Wood for the purchase of his patent: what were his other visible costs, I know not; what his latent, is variously conjectured. Swift

Take him over the costard with the belt of thy sword Shakesp. Richard III

2. An apple round and bulky like the head.

Many country vicars are driven to shifts; and if our greedy patrons hold us to such conditions, they will make us turn costard mongers, grasiers, or sell ale. Burton on Melancholy.

CO'STIVE. adj. [constipatus, Lat. constipé, Fr.]

1. Bound in the body; having the excretions obstructed.

When the passage of the gall becomes obstructed the body grows costive, and the excrements of the belly white. Brown.

While faster than his costive brain indites,
Philo's quick hand in flowing letters writes;
His case appears to me like honest League's,
When he was run away with by his legs. Prior.

2. Close; unpermeable.

Clay in dry seasons is costive, hardening with the sun and wind, till unlocked by industry, so as to admit of the air and heavenly influences.
Mortimer's Husbandry.

Co'stiveness. n. s. [from costive.] The state of the body in which excretion is obstructed.

Costiveness disperses malign putrid fumes out of the guts and mesentery into all parts of the body, occasioning head-aches, fevers, loss of appetite, and disturbance of concoction. Harvey.

Costiveness has ill effects, and is hard to be dealt with by physick; purging medicines rather increasing than removing the evil. Locke on Edu.

Co'stliness. n. s. [from costly.] Sumptuousness; expensiveness.

Though not with curious costliness, yet with cleanly sufficiency, it entertained me. Sidney.

Nor have the frugaller sons of fortune any reason to object the costliness; since they frequently pay dearer for less advantageous pleasures. Glan. Scep.

Co'stly. adj. [from cost.] Sumptuous; expensive; of a high price.

Costly thy habit as thy purse can buy,
But not exprest in fancy; rich, not gaudy,
For the apparel oft proclaims the man. Shak. Ham.

Leave for a while thy costly country-seat;
And, to be great indeed, forget
The nauseous pleasures of the great. Dryden

The chapel of St. Laurence will be perhaps the most costly piece of work on the earth, when completed. Addison.

He is here speaking of Paradise, which he represents as a most charming and delightful place; abounding with things not only useful and convenient, but even the most rare and valuable, the most costly and desirable. Woodward's Nat. Hist.

We now debate. Milton's Paradise Lost.

CO'VERT. adj. [couvert, Fr.] The state of a woman sheltered by marriage under her husband; as covert baron, feme covert.

Instead of her being under covert baron, to be under covert feme myself! to have my body disabled, and my head fortified! Dryden's Spanish Friar.

COVERT-WAY. n. s. [from covert and way.] It is, in fortification, a space of ground level with the field, on the edge of the ditch, three or four fathom broad, ranging quite round the half moons, or other works toward the country. One of the greatest difficulties in a siege is to make a lodgment on the covert-way, because usually the besieged pallisade it along the middle, and undermine it on all sides. It is sometimes called the corridor, and sometimes the counterscarp, because it is on the edge of the scarp. Harris.

CO'VERTLY. adv. [from covert.] Secretly; closely; in private; with privacy.

Yet still Aragnol (so his foe was hight)
Lay lurking, covertly him to surprise.
Spenser's Muiopotmos.

How can'st thou cross this marriage?——
——Not honestly, my lord, but so covertly, that no dishonesty shall appear in me.
Shakesp. Much ado about Nothing.

Amongst the poets, Persius covertly strikes at Nero; some of whose verses he recites with scorn and indignation. Dryden

CO'VERTNESS. n. s. [from covert.] Secrecy; privacy. Dict.

CO'VERTURE. n. s. [from covert.]

1. Shelter; defence; not exposure.

It may be it is rather the shade, or other coverture, that they take liking in, than the virtue of the herb. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

He saw their shame, that sought
Vain *coverture*s. Milton's Par. Lost.

The winds being so fierce, and so severe, as not to suffer any thing to thrive beyond the height of a shrub, in those islands, unless protected by walls, or other like coverture. Woodward.

2. [In law.] The estate and condition of a married woman, who, by the laws of our realm, is in potestate viri, and therefore disabled to contract with any, to the prejudice of herself or her husband, without his allowance or confirmation. Cowell.

The infancy of king Edward VI. and the coverture of queen Mary, did, in fact disable them to accomplish the conquest of Ireland.
Davies on Ireland.

To CO'VET. v. a. [convoiter, Fr.]

1. To desire inordinately; to desire beyond due bounds.

If it be a sin to covet honour,
I am the most offending man alive. Shak. Hen. V.

I am yet
Unknown to woman, never was forsworn;
Scarcely have coveted what was mine own,
At no time broke my faith. Shakesp. Macbeth.

O father! can it be, that souls sublime
Return to visit our terrestrial clime?
And that the generous mind, releas'd by death,
Can covet lazy limbs and mortal breath?
Dryden's Æneid.

2. To desire earnestly.

All things coveting as much as may be to be like unto God in being ever; that which cannot hereunto attain personally, doth seek to continue itself another way, by offspring and propagation.
Hooker.

But covet earnestly the best gifts. 1 Cor. xii. 31.

To CO'VET. v. n. To have a strong desire.

The love of money is the root of all evil, which while some coveted after, they have erred from the faith. 1 Tim. vi.

CO'VETABLE. adj. [from covet.] To be wished for; to be coveted. Dict.

CO'VETISE. n. s. [convoitise, Fr.] Avarice; covetousness of money. Not in use.

Most wretched wight, whom nothing might suffice,
Whose greedy lust did lack in greatest store;
Whose need had end, but no end covetise. Fairy Q.

CO'VETOUS. adj. [convoiteux, Fr.]

1. Inordinately desirous; eager.

While cumber'd with my dropping clothes I lay,
The cruel nation, covetous of prey,
Stain'd with my blood th' unhospitable coast.
Dryden's Æneid.

2. Inordinately eager of money; avaricious.

An heart they have exercised with covetous practices. 2 Peter, ii. 14

What he cannot help in his nature, you must not account a vice in him: you must in no ways say he is covetous. Shakesp.

Let never so much probability hang on one side of a covetous man's reasoning, and money on the other, it is easy to foresee which will outweigh.
Locke.

3. Desirous; eager: in a good sense.

Sheba was never
More covetous of wisdom and fair virtue,
Than this fair soul shall be. Shakesp. Henry VIII.

He that is envious or angry at a virtue that is not his own, at the perfection or excellency of his neighbour, is not covetous of the virtue, but of its reward and reputation; and then his intentions are polluted. Taylor's Rule of Living Holy.

CO'VETOUSLY. adv. [from covetous.] Avariciously; eagerly.

If he care not for't, he will supply us easily; if he covetously reserve it, how shall 's get it? Shak.

CO'VETOUSNESS. n s. [from covetous.]

1. Avarice; inordinate desire of money; eagerness of gain.

He that takes pains to serve the ends of covetousness, or ministers to another's lust, or keeps a shop of impurities or intemperance, is idle in the worst sense. Taylor's Holy Living.

Covetousness debaseth a man's spirit, and sinks it into the earth. Tillotson.

2. Eagerness; desire: in a neutral sense.

When workmen strive to do better than well,
They do confound their skill in covetousness.
Shakesp. King John.

CO'VEY. n. s. [couvée, Fr.]

1. A hatch; an old bird with her young ones.

2. A number of birds together.

A flight of wasps and covey of partridges went to a farmer, and begged a sup of him, to quench their thirst. L'Estrange.

A covey of partridges springing in our front, put our infantry in disorder. Addison's Freeholder.

There would be no walking in a shady wood, without springing a covey of toasts.
Addison's Guardian

COUGH. n. s. [kuch, Dut.] A convulsion of the lungs, vellicated by some sharp serosity.

In consumptions of the lungs, when nature cannot expel the cough, men fall into fluxes of the belly, and then they die. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

For his dear sake long restless nights you bore,
While rattling coughs his heaving vessels tore.
Smith.

To COUGH. v. n. [kuchen, Dut.] To have the lungs convulsed; to make a noise in endeavouring to evacuate the peccant matter from the lungs.

Thou didst drink
The stale of horses, and the gilded puddle
Which beasts would cough at.
Shakesp. Antony and Cleopatra.

Thou hast quarrelled with a man for coughing in the street, because he hath wakened thy dog that hath lain asleep in the sun.
Shakesp. Romeo and Juliet.

The first problem enquireth why a man doth cough, but not an ox or cow; whereas the contrary is often observed. Brown.

If any humour be discharged upon the lungs, they have a faculty of casting it up by coughing.
Ray on the Creation.

I cough like Horace, and tho' lean, am short.
Pope's Epistles.

To COUGH. v. a. To eject by a cough; to expectorate.

If the matter be to be discharged by expectoration, it must first pass into the substance of the lungs; then into the aspera arteria, or weasand; and from thence be coughed up, and spit out by the mouth. Wiseman's Surgery.

CO'UGHER. n. s. [from cough.] One that coughs. Dict.

CO'VIN. } n. s. A deceitful agreement
CO'VINE. } between two or more, to the hurt of another. Cowell.

CO'VING. n. s. [from cove.] A term in building, used of houses that project the ground-plot, and the turned projecture arched with timber, lathed and plastered. Harris.

COULD [the imperfect preterite of can. See CAN.] Was able to; had power to.

And if I have done well, and as is fitting the story, it is that which I desired; but if slenderly and meanly, it is that which I could attain unto.
2 Mac. xv. 38.

What if he did not all the ill he could?
Am I oblig'd by that t' assist his rapines,
And to maintain his murders?
Dryden's Spanish Friar.

CO'ULTER. n. s. [culter, Lat.] The sharp iron of the plough, which cuts the earth perpendicular to the share.

The Israelites went down to sharpen every man his share, and his coulter, and his ax, and his mattock. 1 Samuel, xiii. 20.

Literature is the grindstone to sharpen the coulters, to whet their natural faculties.
Hammond on Fundamentals.

The plough for stiff clays is long and broad: and the coulter long, and very little bending, with a very large wing. Mortimer.

CO'UNCIL. n. s. [concilium, Lat.]

1. An assembly of persons met together in consultation.

The chief priests, and all the council, sought false witness. Matthew, xxvi. 59.

The Stygian council thus dissolv'd; and forth
In order came the grand infernal peers Milton.

In histories composed by politicians, they are for drawing up a perpetual scheme of causes and events, and preserving a constant correspondence between the camp and the council table.
Addison's Spectator.

2. Act of publick deliberation.

The scepter'd heralds call
To council in the city gates: anon
Grey-headed men and grave, with warriors mix'd,
Assemble, and harangues are heard. Milton.

3. An assembly of divines to deliberate upon religion.

Some borrow all their religion from the fathers of the Christian church, or from their synods or councils. Watts.

4. Persons called together to be consulted on any occasion, or to give advice.

They being thus assembled, are more properly a council to the king, the great council of the kingdom, to advise his majesty in those things of weight and difficulty, which concern both the king and people, than a court.
Bacon's Advice to Villiers.

5. The body of privy counsellors.

Without the knowledge
Either of king or council, you made bold
To carry into Flanders the great seal.
Shakesp. Henry VIII.

COUNCIL-BOARD. n. s. [council and board.] Council-table; table where matters of state are deliberated.

He hath commanded,
To-morrow morning to the council-board
He be convened. Shakesp. Henry VIII.

When ship-money was transacted at the council-board, they looked upon it as a work of that power they were obliged to trust. Clarendon.

And Pallas, if she broke the laws,
Must yield her foe the stronger cause;
A shame to one so much ador'd
For wisdom at Jove's council-board. Swift.

CO'UNSEL. n. s. [consilium. Lat.]

1. Advice; direction.

There is as much difference between the counsel that a friend giveth, and that a man giveth himself, as there is between the counsel of a friend and of a flatterer. Bacon.

The best counsel he could give him was, to go to his parliament. Clarendon.

Bereave me not,
Whereon I live, thy gentle looks, thy aid,
Thy counsel, in this uttermost distress. Milton.

2. Consultation; interchange of opinions.

I hold as little counsel with weak fear
As you, or any Scot that lives. Shak. Hen. IV.

3. Deliberation; examination of consequences.

They all confess, therefore, in the working of that first cause, that counsel is used, reason followed, and a way observed. Hooker.

4. Prudence; art; machination.

O how comely is the wisdom of old men, and understanding and counsel to men of honour. Ecclus. xxv. 5.

There is no wisdom, nor understanding, nor counsel, against the Lord. Prov. xxi. 30.

5. Secrecy; the secrets entrusted in consulting.

The players cannot keep counsel; they'll tell all. Shakesp.

6. Scheme; purpose; design. Not in use.

The counsel of the Lord standeth for ever, the thoughts of his heart to all generations. Psalm xxxiii. 11.

O God, from whom all holy desires, all good counsels, and all just works do proceed. Common Prayer.

7. Those that plead a cause; the counsellors. This seems only an abbreviature usual in conversation.

Your hand, a covenant; we will have these things set down by lawful counsel. Shak Cymbeline.

For the advocates and counsel that plead, patience and gravity of learning is an essential part of justice; and an overspeaking judge is no well-tuned cymbal. Bacon.

What says my counsel learned in the law? Pope.

To CO'UNSEL. v. a. [consilior, Lat.]

1. To give advice or counsel to any person.

But say, Lucetta, now we are alone,
Would'st thou then counsel me to fall in love?
Shakesp.

Truth shall nurse her;
Holy and heav'nly thoughts still counsel her.
Shakesp. Henry VIII.

There is danger of being unfaithfully counselled, and more for the good of them that counsel than for him that is counselled. Bacon.

Ill fortune never crushed that man whom good fortune deceived not; I therefore have counselled my friends never to trust to her fairer side, though she seemed to make peace with them. Ben Jonson's Discoveries.

He supports my poverty with his wealth, and I counsel and instruct him with my learning and experience. Taylor.

2. To advise any thing.

The less had been our shame,
The less his counsell'd crime which brands the Grecian name. Dryden's Fables.

CO'UNSELLABLE. adj. [from counsel.] Willing to receive and follow the advice or opinions of others.

Very few men of so great parts were more counsellable than he; so that he would seldom be in danger of great errours, if he would communicate his own thoughts to disquisition Clarendon.

CO'UNSELLOR. n. s. [from counsel. This should rather be written counseller.]

1. One that gives advice.

His mother was his counsellor to do wickedly. 2 Chron. xxii. 3.

She would be a counsellor of good things, and a comfort in cares. Wisdom, viii. 9.

Death of thy soul! Those linen cheeks of thine
Are counsellors to fear. Shakesp. Macbeth.

2. Confidant; bosom friend.

In such green palaces the first kings reign'd,
Slept in their shades, and angels entertain'd;
With such old counsellors they did advise,
And by frequenting sacred groves grew wise.
Waller.

3. One whose province is to deliberate and advise upon publick affairs.

You are a counsellor,
And by that virtue no man dare accuse you.
Shakesp. Henry VIII.

Of counsellors there are two sorts: the first, consiliarii nati, as I may term them; such are the prince of Wales, and others of the king's sons: but the ordinary sort of counsellors are such as the king, out of a due consideration of their worth and abilities, and withal of their fidelity to his person and to his crown, calleth to be of council with him, in his ordinary government. Bacon's Advice to Villiers.

4. One that is consulted in a case of law; a lawyer.

A counsellor bred up in the knowledge of the municipal and statute laws, may honestly inform a just prince how far his prerogative extends. Dryden's Juvenal, Dedication.

CO'UNSELLORSHIP. n. s. [from counsellor.] The office or post of a privy counsellor.

Of the great offices and officers of the kingdom, the most part are such as cannot well be severed from the counsellorship. Bacon's Advice to Villiers.

To COUNT. v. a. [compter, Fr. computare, Lat.]

1. To number; to tell.

Here thro' this grate I can count every one,
And view the Frenchmen. Shakesp Henry VI.

For the preferments of the world, he that would reckon upon all the accidents that they depend upon, may as well undertake to count the sands, or to sum up infinity. South.

When men in sickness ling'ring lie,
They count the tedious hours by months and years.
Dryden.

Argos now rejoice, for Thebes lies low;
Thy slaughter'd sons now smile, and think they won,
When they can count more Theban ghosts than theirs. Dryden.

2. To preserve a reckoning.

Some people in America counted their years by the coming of certain birds amongst them at their certain seasons, and leaving them at others. Locke.

3. To reckon; to place to an account.

He believed in the Lord, and he counted it to him for righteousness. Genesis, xv. 6.

Not barely the plowman's pains is to be counted into the bread we eat; the labour of those who broke the oxen, must all be charged on the account of labour. Locke.

4. To esteem; to account; to reckon; to consider as having a certain character, whether good or evil.

When once it comprehendeth any thing above this, as the differences of time, affirmations, negations, and contradictions in speech, we then count it to have some use of natural reason. Hooker.

Count not thine handmaid for a daughter of Belial. 1 Sam. i.

Nor shall I count it heinous to enjoy
The public marks of honour and reward
Conferr'd upon me. Milton's 'goniste.

You would not wish to count this man a foe!
In friendship, and in hatred, obstinate.
Philips's Briton.

5. To impute to; to charge to.

All the impossibilities, which poets
Count to extravagance of loose description,
Shall sooner be. Rowe's Ambitious Stepmother.

To COUNT. v. n. To found an account or scheme: with upon.

I think it a great errour to count upon the genius of a nation, as a standing argument in all ages. Swift.

COUNT. n. s. [compte, Fr. computus, Lat.]

1. Number.

That we up to your palaces may mount,
Of blessed saints for to increase the count.
Spenser's Epithal.

2. Reckoning; number summed.

By my count,
I was your mother much upon these years. Shak.
Since I saw you last,
There is a change upon you.——
——Well, I know not
What counts hard fortune casts upon my face.
Shakesp.

COUNT. n. s. [comte, Fr. comes, Lat.] A title of foreign nobility, supposed equivalent to an earl.

CO'UNTABLE. adj. [from count.] That which may be numbered.

The evils which you desire to be recounted are very many, and almost countable with those which were hidden in the basket of Pandora. Spenser's Ireland.

CO'UNTENANCE. n. s. [contenance, Fr.]

1. The form of the face; the system of the features.

2. Air; look.

A made countenance about her mouth, between simpering and smiling; her head, bowed somewhat down, seemed to languish with over-much idleness. Sidney.

Well, Suffolk, yet thou shalt not see me blush,
Nor change my countenance for this arrest:
A heart unspotted is not easily daunted.
Shakesp. Henry VI.

So spake our sire, and by his count'nance seem'd
Entering on studious thoughts abstruse. Milton.
To whom, with count'nance calm, and soul sedate,
Thus Turnus. Dryden's Æneid.

3. Calmness of look; composure of face.

She smil'd severe; nor with a troubled look,
Or trembling hand, the fun'ral present took;
Ev'n kept her count'nance, when the lid remov'd
Disclos'd the heart unfortunately lov'd.
Dryden's Fables.

The two great maxims of any great man at court are, always to keep his countenance, and never to keep his word. Swift.

4. Confidence of mien; aspect of assurance: it is commonly used in these phrases, in countenance, and out of countenance.

The night beginning to draw on, and a fit place, the gentlewoman, even out of countenance before she began her speech, invited me to lodge that night with her father. Sidney.

We will not make your countenance to fall by the answer ye shall receive. Bacon's New Atlantis.

Their best friends were out of countenance, because they found that the imputations, which their enemies had laid upon them, were well grounded. Clarendon.

Your examples will meet it at every t rn, and put it out of countenance in every place: even in private corners it will soon lose confidence. Spratt's Sermons.

If the outward profession of religion and virtue were once in practice and countenance at court, a good treatment of the clergy would be the necessary consequence. Swift.

If those preachers would look about, they would find one part of their congregation out of countenance, and the other asleep. Swift.

It is a kind of ill manners to offer objections to a fine woman, and a man would be out of countenance that should gain the superiority in such a contest: a coquette logician may be rallied, but not contradicted. Addison's Freeholder.

It puts the learned in countenance, and gives them a place among the fashionable part of mankind. Addison's Freeholder.

5. Kindness or ill-will, as it appears upon the face.

Yet the stout fairy, 'mongst the middest crowd,
Thought all their glory vain in knightly view,
And that great princess too, exceeding proud,
That to strange knight no better countenance allow'd. Spenser.

6. Patronage; appearance of favour; appearance on any side; support.

The church of Christ, which held that profession which had not the publick allowance and countenance of authority, could not use the exercise of the Christian religion but in private. Hooker.

His majesty maintained an army here, to give strength and countenance to the civil magistrate. Davies on Ireland.

Now then we'll use
His countenance for the battle; which being done,
Let her who would be rid of him devise
His speedy taking off. Shak. King Lear.

This is the magistrate's peculiar province, to give countenance to piety and virtue, and to rebuke vice and profaneness. Atterbury.

7. Superficial appearance; show; resemblance.

The election being done, he made countenance of great discontent thereat Ascham's Schoolmaster.

Oh, you blessed ministers above!
Keep me in patience, and with ripen'd time
Unfold the evil, which is here wrapt up
In countenance. Shakesp. Measure for Measure.

Bianca's love
Made me exchange my state with Tranio,
While he did bear my countenance in the town. Shakesp.

To CO'UNTENANCE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To support; to patronise; to vindicate.

Neither shalt thou countenance a poor man in his cause. Exodus

This conceit, though countenanced by learned men, is not made out either by experience or reason. Brown

This national fault, of being so very talkative, looks natural and graceful in one that has grey hairs to countenance it. Addison.

CO'UNTER. n. s. [from count.]

1. A false piece of money used as a means of reckoning.

Will you with counter sum
The vast proportion of his infinite? Shakesp.

Though these half-pence are to be received as money in the Exchequer, yet in trade they are no better than counters. Swift's Consid. on Wood's Coin.

2. Money, in contempt.

When Marcus Brutus grows so covetous,
To lock such rascal counters from his friends,
Be ready, gods! with all your thunder-bolts
Dash him to pieces. Shakesp. Julius Cæsar.

3. The table on which goods are viewed, and money told, in a shop.

A fine gaudy minx, that robs our counters every night; and then goes out, and spends it upon our cuckold-makers. Dryden.

In half-whipt muslin needles useless lie,
And shuttlecocks across the counter fly. Gay's Trivia.

Sometimes you would see him behind his counter selling broadcloth, sometimes measuring linen. Arbuthnot.

Whether thy counter shine with sums untold,
And thy wide-grasping hand grows black with gold. Swift.

4. Counter of a Horse, is that part of a horse's fore hand that lies between the shoulder and under the neck. Far. Dict.

CO'UNTER. adv. [contre, Fr. contra, Lat.]

1. Contrary to; in opposition to: it is commonly used with the verb run, perhaps by a metaphor from the old tournaments.

Shall we erect two wills in God's, and make the will of his purpose and intention run counter to the will of his approbation? South.

The profit of the merchant, and the gain of the kingdom, are so far from being always parallels, that frequently they run counter one to the other. Child on Trade.

He thinks it brave, at his first setting out, to signalize himself in running counter to all the rules of virtue. Locke.

2. The wrong way; contrarily to the right course.

How cheerfully on the false trail they cry,
Oh, this is counter, you false Danish dogs! Shakesp. Hamlet.

3. Contrary ways.

To COUNTERDRA'W. v. a. [from counter and draw.] With painters, to copy a design or painting by means of a fine linen cloth, an oiled paper, or other transparent matter, whereon the strokes, appearing through, are traced with a pencil. Chambers.

COUNTERE'VIDENCE. n. s. [from counter and evidence.] Testimony by which the deposition of some former witness is opposed.

Sense itself detects its more palpable deceits by a counter-evidence, and the more ordinary impostures seldom outlive the first experiments. Glanv. Sceps.

We have little reason to question his testimony in this point, seeing it is backed by others of good credit; and all because there is no counterevidence, nor any witness, that appears against it. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

To COUNTERFEIT. v. a. [contrefaire, Fr.]

1. To copy with an intent to pass the copy for an original; to forge.

What art thou,
That counterfeits the person of a king? Shakesp. Henry IV.

It came into this priest's fancy to cause this lad to counterfeit and personate the second son of Edward IV. supposed to be murdered. Bacon's H. VII.

There have been some that could counterfeit the distance of voices, which is a secondary object of hearing, in such sort, as, when they stand fast by you, you would think the speech came from afar off in a fearful manner. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

Say, lovely dream, where couldst thou find
Shadows to counterfeit that face? Waller.

It happens, that not one single line or the sight is contained in this imposture, although it appears that they who counterfeited me had heard of the true one. Swift.

2. To imitate; to copy; to resemble.

And, oh, you mortal engines! whose rude throats
Th' immortal Jove's dread clamours counterfeit, Farewel! Shakesp. Othello.

O Eve! in evil hour thou didst give ear
To that false worm, of whomsoever taught
To counterfeit man's voice. Milton's Par. Lost.

To counterfeit, is to put on the likeness and appearance of some real excellency: Bristol-stones would not pretend to be diamonds, if there never had been diamonds. Tillotson.

COUNTERFEIT. adj. [from the verb.]

1. That which is made in imitation of another, with intent to pass for the original; forged; fictitious.

I learn
Now of my own experience, not by talk,
How counterfeit a coin they are, who friends
Bear in their superscription; in prosperous days
They swarm, but in adverse withdraw their head. Milton.

General observations drawn from particulars, are the jewels of knowledge, comprehending great store in a little room; but they are therefore to be made with the greater care and caution, lest, if we take counterfeit for true, our shame be the greater, when our stock comes to a severe scrutiny. Locke.

2. Deceitful; hypocritical.

True friends appear less mov'd than counterfeit. Roscommon.

COUNTERFEIT. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. One who personates another; an impostor.

I am no counterfeit; to die is to be a counterfeit; for he is but the counterfeit of a man, who hath not the life of a man. Shakesp.

This priest, being utterly unacquainted with the true person, according to whose pattern he should shape his counterfeit, yet could think it possible for him to instruct his player, either in gesture or fashions, or in fit answers to questions, to come near the resemblance. Bacon.

But trust me, child, I'm much inclin'd to fear
Some counterfeit in this your Jupiter. Addison's Ov.

2. Something made in imitation of another, intended to pass for that which it resembles; a forgery.

My father was I know not where,
When I was stampt. Some coiner, with his tools,
Made me a counterfeit; yet my mother seem'd
The Dian of that time. Shakesp. Cymbeline.

There would be no counterfeits but for the sake of something real; though pretenders seem to be what they really are not, yet they pretend to be something that really is. Tillotson.

COUNTERFEITER. n. s. [from counterfeit.] A forger; one who contrives copies to pass for originals.

Henry the Second altered the coin, which was corrupted by counterfeiters, to the great good of the commonwealth. Camden.

COUNTERFEITLY. adv. [from counterfeit.] Falsely; fictitiously; with forgery.

Since the wisdom of their choice is rather to have my cap than my heart, I will practise the insinuating nod, and be off to them most counterfeitly. Shakesp. Coriolanus.

COUNTERFE'RMENT. n. s. [counter and ferment.] Ferment opposed to ferment.

What unnatural motions and counterferments must a medley of intemperance produce in the body! when I behold a fashionable table, I fancy I see innumerable distempers lurking in ambuscade among the dishes. Addison's Spectator.

COUNTERFE'SANCE. n. s. [contrefaisance, Fr.] The act of counterfeiting; forgery. Not in use.

And his mun Reynold, with fine counterfesance,
Supports his credit and his countenance. Hubberd's Tale.

Such is the face of falsehood, such the sight
Of foul Duessa, when her borrow'd light
Is laid away, and counterfesance known. Fairy Q.

COUNTERFORT. n. s. [from counter and fort.]

Counterforts, buttresses or spurs, are pillars serving to support walls or terrasses subject to bulge. Chambers.

COUNTERMA'RCH. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Retrocession; march backward; march in a different direction from the former.

How are such an infinite number of things placed with such order in the memory, notwithstanding the tumults, marches, and countermarches of the animal spirits? Collier on Thought.

2. Change of measures; alteration of conduct.

They make him do and undo, go forward and backwards by such countermarches and retractions, as we do not willingly impute to wisdom. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

COUNTERMARK. n. s. [counter and mark.]

1. A second or third mark put on a bale of goods belonging to several merchants, that it may not be opened but in the presence of them all.

2. The mark of the goldsmiths company, to shew the metal is standard, added to that of the artificer.

3. An artificial cavity made in the teeth of horses that have outgrown their natural mark, to disguise their age.

4. A mark added to a medal a long time after it is struck, by which the curious know the several changes in value which it has undergone. Chambers.

To COUNTERMA'RK. v. a. [counter and mark.]

A horse is said to be countermarked, when his corner teeth are artificially made hollow, a false mark being made in the hollow place, in imitation of the eye of a bean, to conceal the horse's age. Farrier's Dict.

COUNTERMI'NE. n. s. [counter and mine.]

1. A well or hole sunk into the ground, from which a gallery or branch runs out under ground, to seek out the enemy's mine, and disappoint it. Military Dict.

After this they mined the walls, laid the powder, and rammed the mouths; but the citizens made a countermine, and thereinto they poured such a plenty of water, that the wet powder could not be fired. Hayward.

2. Means of opposition; means of counteraction.

He thinking himself contemned, knowing no countermine against contempt but terror, began to let nothing pass, which might bear the colour of a fault, without sharp punishment. Sidney.

3. A stratagem by which any contrivance is defeated.

The matter being brought to a trial of skill, the countermine was only an act of self-preservation. L'Estrange

To COUNTERMI'NE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To delve a passage into an enemy's mine, by which the powder may evaporate without mischief.

2. To counterwork; to defeat by secret measures.

Thus infallibly it must be, if God do not miraculously countermine us, and do more for us than we can do against ourselves. Decay of Piety.

COUNTERMO'TION. n. s. [counter and motion.] Contrary motion; opposition of motion.

That resistence is a countermotion, or equivalent to one, is plain by this, that any body which is pressed, must needs press again on the body that presses it. Digby on the Soul.

If any of the returning spirits should happen to fall foul upon others which are outward bound, these countermotions would overset them, or occasion a later arrival Collier.

COUNTERMU'RE. n. s. [contremur, Fr.] A wall built up behind another wall, to supply its place.

The great shot flying through the breach, did beat down houses; but the countermure, new built against the breach, standing upon a lower ground, it seldom touched. Knolles.

COUNTERO'PENING. n. s. [counter and opening.] An aperture or vent on the contrary side.

A tent, plugging up the orifice, would make the matter recur to the part disposed to receive it, and mark the place for a counteropening. Sharp's Surgery.

COUNTERPA'CE. n. s. [counter and pace.] Contrary measure; attempts in opposition to any scheme.

When the least counterpaces are made to these resolutions, it will then be time enough for our malecontents. Swift

CO'UNTERPANE. n. s. [contrepoint, Fr.] A coverlet for a bed, or any thing else woven in squares. It is sometimes written, according to etymology, counterpoint.

In ivory coffers I have stuff'd my crowns;
In cyprus chests my arras counterpanes. Shakesp.

COUNTERPA'RT. n. s. [counter and part.] The correspondent part; the part which answers to another, as the two papers of a contract; the part which fits another, as the key of a cypher.

In some things the laws of Normandy agreed with the laws of England; so that they seem to be, as it were, copies or counterparts one of another. Hale's Law of Eng and.

An old fellow with a young wench, may pass for a counterpart of this fable. L'Estrange.

Oh counterpart
Of our soft sex; well are you made our lords:
So bold, so great, so god-like are you form'd,
How can you love so silly things as women? Dryd.

He is to consider the thought of his author, and his words, and to find out the counterpart to each in another language. Dryden.

In the discovery, the two different plots look like counterparts and copies of one another. Addison's Spectator.

COUNTERPLE'A. n. s. [from counter and plea.] In law, a replication: as, if a stranger to the action begun desire to be admitted to say what he can for the safeguard of his estate, that which the demandant alleageth against this request is called a counterplea. Cowell.

To COUNTERPLO'T, v. a. [counter and plot.] To oppose one machination by another; to obviate art by art.

COUNTERPLOT. n. s. [from the verb.] An artifice opposed to an artifice.

CO'UNTERPOINT. n. s. A coverlet woven in squares, commonly spoken counterpane. See COUNTERPANE.

To COUNTERPOISE. v. a. [counter and poise.]

1. To counterbalance; to be equi-ponderant to; to act against with equal weight.

Our spoils we have brought home
Do more than counterpoise a full third part
The charges of the action. Shakesp. Coriolanus.

The force and the distance of weights counterpoising one another, ought to be reciprocal. Digby on the Soul.

2. To produce a contrary action by an equal weight.

The heaviness of bodies must be counterpoised by a plummet fastened about the pulley to the axis. Wilkins.

3. To act with equal power against any person or cause.

So many freeholders of English will be able to bear and to counterpoise the rest. Spenser on Ireland.

CO'UNTERPOISE. n.s. [from counter and poise.]

1. Equiponderance; equivalence of weight; equal force in the opposite scale of the balance.

Take her by the hand,
And tell her she is thine; to whom I promise
A counterpoise, if not in thy estate,
A balance more replete. Shakesp. All's well that ends well.

Fastening that to our exact balance, we put a metalline counterpoise into the opposite scale. Boyle's Spring of the Air.

2. The state of being placed in the opposite scale of the balance.

Th' Eternal hung forth his golden scales,
Wherein all things created first he weigh'd,
The pendulous round earth, with balanc'd air
In counterpoise. Milton's Par Lost.

3. Equipollence: equivalence of power.

The second nobles are a counterpoise to the higher nobility, that they grow not too potent. Bacon.

Their generals, by their credit in the army, were, with the magistrates and other civil officers, a sort of counterpoise to the power of the people. Swift

COUNTERPO'ISON n. s. [counter and poison.] Antidote; medicine by which the effects of poison are obviated.

Counterpoisons must be adapted to the cause; for example, in poison from sublimate corrosive, and arsenick. Arbuthnot.

COUNTERPRE'SSURE. n.s. [counter and pressure.] Opposite force; power acting in contrary directions.

Does it not all mechanick heads confound,
That troops of atoms from all parts around,
Of equal number, and of equal force,
Should to this single point direct their course;
That so the counterpressure ev'ry way,
Of equal vigour, might their motions stay,
And by a steady pause the whole in quiet lay? Blackmore.

COUNTERPRO'JECT. n. s. [counter and project.] Correspondent part of a scheme.

A clear reason why they never sent any forces to Spain, and why the obligation not to enter into a treaty of peace with France, until that entire monarchy was yielded as a preliminary, was struck out of the counterproject by the Dutch. Swift.

To COUNTERPRO'VE. v. a. [from counter and prove.] To take off a design in black lead, or red chalk, by passing it through the rolling-press with another piece of paper, both being moistened with a sponge. Chambers.

COUNTERTIDE. n. s. [counter and tide.] Contrary tide; fluctuations of the water.

Such were our countertides at land, and so
Presaging of the fatal blow,
In your prodigious ebb and flow. Dryden.

COUNTERTI'ME. n. s. [counter and time; contretemps, Fr.]

1. The defence or resistance of a horse, that intercepts his cadence, and the measure of his manage. Farrier's Dict.

2. Defence; opposition.

Let cheerfullness on happy fortune wait,
And give not thus the countertime to fate. Dryden's Aurengzebe.

COUNTERTU'RN. n.s. [counter and turn.] The catastasis called by the Romans status, the heigh and full growth of the play, we may call properly the counterturn, which destroys that expectation, embroils the action in new difficulties, and leaves you far distant from that hope in which it found you. Dryden on Dramatick Poesy.

To COUNTERVA'IL. v. a. [contra and valeo, Lat.] To be equivalent to; to have equal force or value; to act against with equal power.

In some men there may be found such qualities as are able to countervail those exceptions which might be taken against them, and such men's authority is not likely to be shaken off. Hooker.

And therewithal he fiercely at him flew,
And with important outrage him assail'd;
Who, soon prepar'd to field, his sword forth drew,
And him with equal valour countervail'd. Fairy Queen.

The outward streams, which descend, must be of so much force as to countervail all that weight whereby the ascending side does exceed the other. Wilkins's Dædalus.

We are to compute, that, upon balancing the account, the profit at last will hardly countervail the inconveniences that go along with it. L'Estrange.

COUNTERVA'IL. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Equal weight; power or value sufficient to obviate any effect or objection.

2. That which has equal weight or value with something else.

Surely, the present pleasure of a sinful act is a poor countervail for the bitterness of the review, which begins where the action ends, and lasts for ever. South's Sermons.

COUNTERVIEW. n. s. [counter and view.]

1. Opposition; a posture in which two persons front each other.

Mean while, ere thus was sinn'd and judg'd on earth,
Within the gates of hell sat Sin and Death,
In counterview. Milton's Par. Lost.

2. Contrast; a position in which two dissimilar things illustrate each other.

I have drawn some lines of Linger's character, on purpose to place it in counterview or contrast with that of the other company. Swift.

To COUNTERWORK. v. a. [counter and work.] To counteract; to hinder any effect by contrary operations.

But heav'n's great view is one, and that the whole:
That counterworks each folly and caprice;
That disappoints th' effect of ev'ry vice. Pope.

CO'UNTESS. n.s. [comitissa, Lat. comtesse, Fr.] The lady of an earl or count.

I take it, she that carries up the train,
Is that old noble lady, the duchess of Norfolk.
—It is, and all the rest are countesses.
Shakesp. Henry VIII.

It is the peculiar happiness of the countess of Abingdon to have been so truly loved by you while she was living, and so gratefully honoured after she was dead. Dryden.

CO'UNTING-HOUSE. n. s. [count and house.] The room appropriated by traders to their books and accounts.

Men in trade seldom think of laying out money upon land, till their profit has brought them in more than their trade can well employ; and their idle bags cumbering their counting houses, put them upon emptying them. Locke.

CO'UNTLESS. adj. [from count.] Innumerable; without number; not to be reckoned.

Ay, tear for tear, and loving kiss for kiss,
Thy brother Marcus tenders on thy lips:
O were the sum of these that I should pay
Countless and infinite, yet would I pay them. Shak.

But oh, her mind, that orcus which includes
Legions of mischief, countless multitudes
Of former curses. Donne.

By one countless sum of woes opprest,
Hoary with cares, and ignorant of rest,
We find the vital springs relax'd and worn;
Thus, thro' the round of age, to childhood we return. Prior.

I see, I cried, his woes, a countless train;
I see his friends o'erwhelm'd beneath the main.
Pope's Odyssey.

COUNTRY. n. s. [contrée, Fr. contrata, low Lat. supposed to be contracted from conterrata.]

1. A tract of land; a region, as distinguished from other regions.

They require to be examined concerning the descriptions of those countries of which they would be informed. Spratt.

2. The parts of a region distant from cities or courts; rural parts.

Would I a house for happiness erect,
Nature alone should be the architect
She' build it more convenient than great,
And doubtless in the country chuse her seat.
Cowley.

I see them hurry from country to town, and then from the town back again into the country. Spect.

3. The place which any man inhabits, or in which he at present resides.

Send out more horses, skirre the country round,
Hang those that talk of fear. Shakesp. Macbeth.

CO'UNTRYMAN. n. s. [from country and man.]

1. One born in the same country, or tract of ground. Locke.

See, who comes here?
My countryman; but yet I know him not.
Shakesp. Macbeth.

Homer, great bard! so fate ordain'd, arose;
And, bold as were his countrymen in fight,
Snatch'd their fair actions from degrading prose,
And set their battles in eternal light. Prior

The British soldiers act with greater vigour under the conduct of one whom they do not consider only as their leader, but as their countryman. Addison on the War.

2. A rustick; one that inhabits the rural parts.

All that have business to the court, and all countrymen coming up to the city, leave their wives in the country. Graunt.

3. A farmer; a husbandman.

A countryman took a boar in his corn. L'Est.

CO'UNTY. n.s. [comté, Fr. comitatus, Lat.]

1. A shire; that is, a circuit or portion of the realm, into which the whole land is divided, for the administration of justice; so that there is no part of the kingdom but what lieth within some county. Every county is governed by a yearly officer, called a sheriff, who puts in execution all the commands and judgments of the king's courts. Of these counties four are termed county-palatines, as that of Lancaster, Chester, Durham, and Ely. A county-palatine is a jurisdiction of so high a nature, that the chief governor of these, by special charter from the king, sent out all writs in their own name; and did all things touching justice as absolutely as the prince himself, only acknowledging him their superior and sovereign. But this power has, by a statute in Henry VIII. his time, been much abridged. There are likewise counties corporate, which are certain cities or ancient boroughs upon which our princes have thought good to bestow extraordinary liberties. Of these London is one, York another, the city of Chester a third, and Canterbury a fourth. And to these may be added many more; as the county of the town of Kingston upon Hull, the county of the town of Haverfordwest, and the county of Litchfield. County is, in another signification, used for the county court. Cowell.

Discharge your powers unto their several counties,
As we will ours. Shakesp. Henry IV.

He caught his death the last county sessions, where he would go to see justice done to a poor widow-woman, and her fatherless childr n. Addison's Spectator.

2. An earldom.

3. [Compté.] A count; a lord. Now wholly obsolete.

The gallant, young, and noble gentleman,
The county Paris Shakesp. Romeo and Juliet.

He made Hugh Lupus county palatine of Chester, and gave that earldom to him and his heirs, to hold the same, ita liberè ad gladium, sicut rex tenebat Angliam ad coronam. Davies.

COUPE'E. n. s. [Fr.] A motion in dancing, when one leg is a little bent and suspended from the ground, and with the other a motion is made forwards. Chambers.

COUPLE. n. s. [couple, Fr. copula, Lat.]

1. A chain or tie that holds dogs together.

I'll keep my stable-stand where
I lodge my wife; I'll go in couples with her,
Than when I feel and see no further trust her.
Shakesp.

It is in some sort with friends as it is with dogs in couples; they should be of the same size and humour. L'Estrange.

2. Two; a brace.

He was taken up by a couple of shepherds, and by them brought to life again. Sidney.

A schoolmaster, who shall teach my son and your, I will provide; yea, though the three do cost me a couple of hundred pounds. Ascham.

A piece of crystal inclosed a couple of drops, which locked like water when they were shaken, though perhaps they are nothing but bubbles of air. Addison on Italy.

By adding one to one, we have the complex idea of a couple. Locke.

3. A male and his female.

So shall all the couples three,
Ever true in loving be. Shak. Mids. Night's Dr.

Oh! alas!
I lost a couple, that 'twixt heaven and earth
Might thus have stood, begetting wonder, as You gracious couple do. Shak. Winter's Tale.

I have read of a feigned commonwealth, where the married couple are permitted, before they contract, to see one another naked. Bac. New Atlantis.

He said: the careful couple join their tears,
And then invoke the gods with pious prayers.
Dryden.

All succeeding generations of men are the progeny of one primitive couple. Bentley's Sermons.

To CO'UPLE. v. a. [copulo, Lat.]

1. To chain together.

Huntsman, I charge thee, tender well my hounds;
And couple Clowder with the deep-mouth'd Brach.
Shakesp.

2. To join one to another.

What greater ills have the heav'ns in store,
To couple coming harms with sorrow past. Sidney

And wheresoe'er we went, like Juno's swans,
Still we went coupled and inseparable.
Shakesp. As you like it.

Put the taches into the loops, and couple the tent together that it may be one. Exodus, xxvi. 11.

They behold your chaste conversation coupled with fear. 1 Peter, iii. 2.

Their concernments were so coupled, that if nature had not, yet their religions would have made them brothers. South.

That man makes a mean figure in the eyes of reason, who is measuring syllables and coupling rhimes, when he should be mending his own soul, and securing his own immortality. Pope.

3. To marry; to wed; to join in wedlock.

I shall rejoice to see you so coupled, as may be fit both for your honour and your satisfaction. Sidney.

I am just going to assist with the archbishop, in degrading a parson who couples all our beggars, by which I shall make one happy man. Swift

To CO'UPLE. v. n. To join in embraces.

Waters in Africa, being rare, divers sorts of beasts come from several parts to drink; and so being refreshed, fall to couple, and many times with several kinds. Bacon.

Thou, with thy lusty crew,
Cast wanton eyes on the daughters of men,
And coupled with them, and begot a race.
Milton's Paradise Regained.

That great variety of brutes in Africa, is by reason of the meeting together of brutes of several species at water, and the promiscuous couplings of males and females of several species.
Hale's Origin of Mankind.

After this alliance,
Let tigers match with hinds, and wolves with sheep,
And every creature couple with his foe.
Dryden's Spanish Friar.

COUPLE-BEGGAR. n. s. [couple and beggar.] One that makes it his business to marry beggars to each other.

No couple-beggar in the land
E'er join'd such numbers hand in hand. Swift.

CO'UPLET. n. s. [Fr.]

1. Two verses; a pair of rhymes.

Then would they cast away their pipes, and holding hand in hand, dance by the only cadence of their voices, which they would use in singing some short couplets, whereto the one half beginning, the other half should answer. Sidney.

Then at the last, an only couplet fraught
With some unmeaning thing they call a thought;
A needless Alexandrine ends the song,
That like a wounded snake drags its slow length along. Pope.

In Pope I cannot read a line,
But with a sigh I wish it mine;
When he can in one couplet fix
More sense than I can do in six,
It gives me such a jealous fit,
I cry, Pox take him and his wit! Swift

2. A pair as of doves.

Anon, as patient as the female dove,
Ere that her golden couplets are disclos'd,
His silence will sit drooping. Shak. Hamlet.

COU'RAGE. n. s. [courage, Fr. from cor, Lat.] Bravery; active fortitude; spirit of enterprize.

The king-becoming graces,
Devotion, patience, courage, fortitude,
I have no relish of them. Shakesp. Macbeth.

Their discipline
Now mingled with their courage. Shakesp. Cymbel.

Hope arms their courage; from their tow'rs they throw
Their darts with double force, and drive the foe.
Dryden.

Courage, that grows from constitution, very often forsakes a man when he has occasion for it; and when it is only a kind of instinct in the soul, it breaks out on all occasions, without judgment or discretion. That courage which arises from the sense of our duty, and from the fear of offending Him that made us, acts always in an uniform manner, and according to the dictates of right reason. Addison's Guardian.

Nothing but the want of common courage was the cause of their misfortunes. Swift.

COURA'GEOUS. adj. [from courage.]

1. Brave; daring; bold; enterprizing; adventurous; hardy; stout.

And he that is courageous among the mighty, shall flee away naked in that day. Amos, ii. 16.

Let us imitate the courageous example of St. Paul, who chose then to magnify his office when ill men conspired to lessen it. Atterbury.

2. It is used ludicrously by Shakespeare for outrageous.

He is very courageous mad about his throwing into the water. Shakesp.

COURA'GEOUSLY. adv. [from courageous.] Bravely; stoutly; boldly.

The king the next day presented him battle upon the plain, the fields there being open and champaign: the earl courageously came down, and joined battle with him. Bacon's Henry VII.

COURA'GEOUSNESS. n. s. [from courageous.] Bravery; boldness; spirit; courage.

Nican r, hearing of the manliness and the courageousness that they had to fight for their country, durst not try the matter by the sword.
2 Maccabees, xiv. 18.

COURA'NT. } n. s. [courante, Fr.] See
COURA'NTO. } CORANT.

1. A nimble dance.

I'll like a maid the better, while I have a tooth in my head: why, he is able to lead her a courranto. Shakesp.

2. Any thing that spreads quick, as a paper of news.

To COURB. v. n. [courber, Fr.] To bend; to bow; to stoop in supplication. Not in use.

In the fatness of these pursy times,
Virtue itself of vice must pardon beg,
Yea, courb and woo, for leave to do it good.
Shakesp. Hamlet.

CO'URIER. n. s. [courier, Fr.] A messenger sent in haste; an express; a runner.

I met a courier, one mine ancient friend.
Shakesp. Timon.

This thing the wary Bassa well perceiving, by speedy couriers advertised Solyman of the enemy's purpose, requesting him with all speed to repair with his army to Tauris. Knolles's History.

COURSE. n. s. [course, Fr. cursus, Lat.]

1. Race; career.

And some she arms with sinewy force,
And some with swiftness in the course. Cowley.

2. Passage from place to place; progress. To this may be referred, the course of a river.

And when we had finished our course from Tyre, we came to Ptolemais. Acts, xxi. 7.

A light, by which the Argive squadron steers
Their silent course to Ilium's well known shore.
Denham.

But this hot knight was cooled with a fall, which, at the third course, he received of Phalantus. Sidney.

4. Ground on which a race is run.

5. Track or line in which a ship sails, or any motion is performed.

6. Sail; means by which the course is performed.

To the courses we have devised studding-sails, sprit-sails, and top-sails. Raleigh's Essays.

7. Progress from one gradation to another; process.

When the state of the controversy is plainly determined, it must not be altered by another disputant in the course of the disputation. Watts.

8. Order of succession; as, every one in his course.

If any man speak in an unknown tongue, let it be by two, or at the most by three, and that by course, and let one interpret. 1 Cor. xiv. 27.

9. Stated and orderly method or manner.

If she live long,
And in the end meet the old course of death,
Women will all turn monsters. Shakesp. King Lear.

The duke cannot deny the course of law. Shak.

If God, by his revealed declaration, first gave rule to any man, he, that will claim by that title, must have the same positive grant of God for his succession; for, if it has not directed the course of its descent and conveyance, no body can succeed to this title of the first ruler. Locke.

10. Series of successive and methodical procedure.

The glands did resolve during her course of physick, and she continueth very well to this day. Wiseman's Surgery.

11. The elements of an art exhibited and explained, in a methodical series. Hence our courses of philosophy, anatomy, chymistry, and mathematicks. Chambers.

12. Conduct; manner of proceeding.

Grittus, perceiving the danger he was in, began to doubt with himself what course were best for him to take. Knolles.

That worthy deputy finding nothing but a common misery, took the best course he possibly could to establish a commonwealth in Ireland. Davies on Ireland.

He placed commissioners there, who governed it only in a course of discretion, part martial, part civil. Davies on Ireland.

Give willingly what I can take by force;
And know, obedience is your safest course.
Dryden's Aurengzebe.

But if a right course be taken with children, there will not be so much need of common rewards and punishments. Locke.

'Tis time we should decree
What course to take. Addison's Cato.

The senate observing how, in all contentions, they were forced to yield to the tribunes and people, thought it their wisest course to give way also to time. Swift.

13. Method of life; train of actions.

A woman of so working a mind, and so vehement spirits, as it was happy she took a good course; or otherwise it would have been terrible. Sidney.

His addiction was to courses vain;
His companies unletter'd, rude, and shallow;
His hours fill'd up with riots, banquets, sports.
Shakesp Henry V.

As the dropsy-man, the more he drinks, the drier he is, and the more he still desires to drink; even so a sinner, the more he sins, the apter is he to sin, and more desirous to keep still a course in wickedness. Perkins.

Men will say,
That beauteous Emma vagrant courses took,
Her father's house and civil life forsook. Prior.

14. Natural bent; uncontrolled will.

It is best to leave nature to her course, who is the sovereign physician in most diseases. Temple.

So ev'ry servant took his course,
And, bad at first, they all grew worse. Prior.

15. Catamenia.
The stoppage of women's courses, if not suddenly looked to, sets them undoubtedly into a consumption, dropsy, or some other dangerous disease. Harvey on Consumptions.

16. Orderly structure.
The tongue defileth the whole body, and setteth on fire the course of nature. James, iii. 6.

17. [In architecture.] A continued range of stones, level or of the same height, throughout the whole length of the building, and not interrupted by any aperture. Harris.

18. Series of consequences.

19. Number of dishes set on at once upon the table.
Worthy Sir, thou bleed'st,
Thy exercise hath been too violent
For a second course of fight. Shakesp. Coriolanus.
Then with a second course the tables load,
And with full chargers offer to the god.
Dryden's Æneid.
You are not to wash your hands till after you have sent up your second course.
Swift's Directions to the Cook.
So quick retires each flying course, you'd swear
Sancho's dread doctor and his wand were there.
Pope.

20. Regularity; settled rule.

21. Empty form.
Men talk as if they believed in God, but they live as if they thought there was none; their vows and promises are no more than words of course.
L'Estrange.

22. Of course. By consequence.
With a mind unprepossessed by doctors and commentators of any sect, whose reasonings, interpretation, and language, which I have been used to, will of course make all chime that way; and make another, and perhaps the genuine meaning of the author, seem harsh, strained, and uncouth to me. Locke.

23. Of course. By settled rule.
Sense is of course annex'd to wealth and power;
No muse is proof against a golden shower. Garth.
Neither shall I be so far wanting to myself, as not to desire a patent, granted of course to all useful projectors. Swift.

To COURSE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To hunt; to pursue.
The big round tears
Cours'd one another down his innocent nose
In piteous chase. Shakesp. As you like it.
The king is hunting the deer; I am coursing myself. Shakesp. Love's Labour Lost.
Where's the thane of Cawdor?
We cours'd him at the heels, and had a purpose
To be his purveyor. Shakesp. Macbeth.

2. To pursue with dogs that hunt in view.
It would be tried also in flying of hawks, or in coursing of a deer, or hart, with greyhounds.
Bacon's Nat. Hist.
I am continually starting hares for you to course; we were certainly cut out for one another; for my temper quits an amour just where thine takes it up. Congreve's Old Bachelor.

3. To put to speed; to force to run.
When they have an appetite
To venery, let them not drink nor eat,
And course them oft, and tire them in the heat.
May's Virgil.

To COURSE. v. n. To run; to rove about.
Swift as quicksilver it courses through
The nat'ral gates and alleys of the body.
Shak. Hamlet.
The blood, before cold and settled, left the liver white and pale, which is the badge of pusillanimity and cowardice; but the sherris warms it, and makes it course from the inwards to the parts extreme. Shakesp. Hen. IV.
She did so course o'er my exteriours, with such a greedy intention, that the appetite of her eye did seem to scorch me up like a burning-glass.
Shakesp. Merry Wives of Windsor.
Ten brace and more of greyhounds, snowy fair,
And tall as stags, ran loose, and cours'd around his chair. Dryden.
All, at once
Relapsing quick, as quickly re-ascend
And mix, and thwart, extinguish, and renew,
All ether coursing in a maze of light.
Thomson's Autumn.

CO'URSER. n. s. [from course; coursier; Fr.]

1. A swift horse; a war horse: a word not used in prose.
He proudly pricketh on his courser strong,
And Atin ay him pricks with spurs of shame and wrong. Spenser.
Then to his absent guest the king decreed
A pair of coursers, born of heav'nly breed;
Who from their nostrils breath'd ethereal fire,
Whom Circe stole from her celestial sire.
Dryden's Æneid.
Th' impatient courser pants in every vein,
And, pawing, seems to beat the distant plain;
Hills, vales, and floods appear already cross'd,
And, ere he starts, a thousand steps are lost. Pope.

2. One who pursues the sport of coursing hares.
A leash is a leathern thong, by which a falconer holds his hawk, or a courser leads his greyhound.
Hanmer.

COURT. n. s. [cour, Fr. koert, Dut. curtis, low Lat.]

1. The place where the prince resides; the palace.
Here do you keep a hundred knights and squires,
Men so disorderly, so debauch'd and bold,
That this our court, infected with their manners,
Shews like a riotous inn; epicurism and lust
Make it more like a tavern, or a brothel,
Than a grac'd palace. Shakesp. King Lear.
It shall be an habitation of dragons, and a court for owls. Isaiah, xxvi. 13.
His exactness, that every man should have his due, was such, that you would think he had never seen a court: the politeness with which this justice was administered, would convince you he never had lived out of one. Prior's Dedication.
A supplliant to your royal court I come.
Pope's Odyssey.

2. The hall or chamber where justice is administered.
Are you acquainted with the difference
That holds this present question in the court?
Shakesp.
St. Paul being brought unto the highest court in Athens, to give an account of the doctrine he had preached concerning Jesus and the resurrection, took occasion to imprint on those magistrates a future state. Atterbury.

3. Open space before a house.
You must have, before you come to the front, three courts: a green court plain, with a wall about it; a second court of the same, but more garnished, with little turrets, or other embellishments, upon the wall; and a third court, to square with the front, not to be built but inclosed with a naked wall. Bacon.
Suppose it were the king's bedchamber, yet the meanest man in the tragedy must come and dispatch his business, rather than in the lobby or court yard (which is fitter for him) for fear the stage should be cleared, and the scenes broken.
Dryden.

4. A small opening inclosed with houses, and paved with broad stones, distinguished from a street.

5. Persons who compose the retinue of a prince.
Their wisdom was so highly esteemed, that some of them were always employed to follow the courts of their kings, to advise them. Temple.

6. Persons who are assembled for the administration of justice

7. Any jurisdiction, military, civil, or ecclesiastical.
If any noise or soldier you perceive
Near to the wall, by some apparent sign
Let us have knowledge at the court of guard.
Shak. Henry VI.
The archbishop
Of Canterbury, accompanied with other
Learned and reverend fathers of his order,
Held a late court at Dunstable. Shak. Hen. VIII.
I have at last met with the proceedings of the court baron held in that behalf. Spectator.

8. The art of pleasing; the art of insinuation.
Him the prince with gentle court did board.
Spenser.
Hast thou been never base? Did love ne'er bend
Thy frailer virtue to betray thy friend?
Flatter me, make thy court, and say it did;
Kings in a crowd would have their vices hid.
Dryden's Aurengzebe.
Some sort of people, placing a great part of their happiness in strong drink, are always forward to make court to my young master, by offering that which they love best themselves. Locke.
I have been considering why poets have such ill success in making their court, since they are allowed to be the greatest and best of all flatterers: the defect is, that they flatter only in print or in writing. Swift to Gay

9. It is often used in composition in most of its senses.

To COURT. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To woo; to solicit a woman to marriage.
Follow a shadow, it flies you;
Seem to fly it, it will pursue:
So court a mistress, she denies you;
Let her alone, she will court you. Ben Jons. Forest.
Fir'd with her love, and with ambition led,
The neighb'ring princes court her nuptial bed.
Dryden's Æneid.
Alas! Sempronius, wouldst thou talk of love
To Marcia, whilst her father's life's in danger?
Thou might'st as well court the pale trembling vestal,
While she beholds the holy flame expiring.
Addison's Cato.
Ev'n now, when silent scorn is all they gain,
A thousand court you, though they court in vain.
Pope.

2. To solicit; to seek.
Their own ease and satisfaction would quickly teach children to court commendation, and avoid doing what they found condemned.
Locke on Education.

3. To flatter; to endeavour to please.

COURT-CHAPLAIN. n. s. [court and chaplain.] One who attends the king to celebrate the holy offices.
The maids of honour have been fully convinced by a famous court-chaplain. Swift.

'Tis a brave night to cool a courtezan. Shak. King Lear.

With them there are no stews, no dissolute houses, no courtesans, nor any thing of that kind; nay they wonder, with detestation, at you in Europe, which permit such things. Bacon's New Atlantic.

The Corinthian is a column lasciviously decked like a courtezan. Wotton.

Charixus, the brother of Sappho, in love with Rhodope the courtezan, spent his whole estate upon her. Addison.

CO'URTESY. n s. [courtoisie, Fr. cortesia, Ital.]

1. Elegance of manners; civility; complaisance.

Sir, you are very welcome to our house:
It must appear in other ways than words,
Therefore I scant this breathing courtesy.
Shakesp. Merchant of Venice.

Who have seen his estate, his hospitality, his courtesy to strangers. Peacham.

He, who was compounded of all the elements of affability and courtesy towards all kind of people, brought himself to a habit of neglect, and even of rudeness, towards the queen. Clarendon.

Courtesy is sooner found in lowly sheds
With smoky rafters, than in tap'stry halls,
And courts of princes, whence it first was nam'd.
Milton

So gentle of condition was he known,
That through the court his courtesy was blown.
Dryden's Fables.

2. An act of civility or respect.

You spurn'd me such a day; another time
You call'd me dog; and, for these courtesies,
I'll lend you thus much money.
Shakesp. Merchant of Venice.

Repose you there, while I to the hard house
Return, and force their scanted courtesy.
Shakesp. King Lear.

When I was last at Exeter,
The mayor in courtesy shew'd me the castle.
Shakesp. Richard III.

Sound all the lofty instruments of war,
And by that musick let us all embrace;
For heav'n to earth some of us never shall
A second time do such a courtesy.
Shakesp. Henry IV.

Other states, assuredly, cannot be justly accused for not staying for the first blow; or for not accepting Polyphemus's courtesy, to be the last that shall be eaten up. Bacon.

3. The reverence made by women.

Some country girl, scarce to a court'sy bred,
Would I much rather than Cornelia wed;
If, supercilious, haughty, proud, and vain,
She brought her father's triumphs in her train.
Dryden's Juvenal.

The poor creature was as full of courtesies as if I had been her godmother: the truth on 't is, I endeavoured to make her look something Christian-like. Congreve's Old Bachelor.

4. A tenure, not of right, but by the favour of others; as, to hold upon courtesy.

5. Courtesy of England. A tenure by which, if a man marry an inheritrix, that is, a woman seised of land, and getteth a child of her that comes alive into the world, though both the child and his wife die forthwith, yet, if she were in possession, shall he keep the land during his life, and is called tenant per legem Anglæ, or by the courtesy of England. Cowell.

To CO'URTESY. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To perform an act of reverence: it is now only used of women.

Toby approaches, and court'sies there to me.

CO'URTIER. n. s. [from court.]

1. One that frequents or attends the courts of princes.

He hath been a courtier, he swears.———
If any man doubts that, let him put me to my purgation. I have trod a measure; I have flattered a lady; I have been politick with my friend, smooth with mine enemy; I have undone three taylors; I have had four quarrels, and like to have fought one. Shakesp. As you like it.

You are a flattering boy; now, I see you'll be a courtier. Shakesp. Merry Wives of Windsor

You know I am no courtier, nor versed in state-affairs. Bacon.

The principal figure in a picture, is like a king among his courtiers, who ought to dim the lustre of his attendants. Dryden.

2. One that courts or solicits the favour of another.

What
Made thee, all honour'd, honest Roman Brutus,
With the arm'd rest, courtiers of beauteous freedom,
To drench the capitol? Shakesp. Ant. and Cleop.

There was not among all our princes a greater courtier of the people than Richard III.; not out of fear, but wisdom. Suckling.

CO'URTINE. See CURTAIN.

CO'URTLIKE. adj. [court and like.] Elegant; polite.

Our English tongue is, I will not say as sacred as the Hebrew, or as learned as the Greek, but as fluent as the Latin, as courteous as the Spanish, as courtlike as the French, and as amorous as the Italian. Camden's Remains.

CO'URTLINESS. n. s. [from courtly.] Elegance of manners; grace of mien; complaisance; civility.

The slightest part that you excel in, is courtliness. Lord Digby to Sir Kenelm Digby.

CO'URTLING. n. s. [from court.] A courtier; a retainer to a court.

COW-LEECH. n. s. [cow and leech.] One who professes to cure distempered cows.

To COW-LEECH. v. n. To profess to cure cows.

Though there are many pretenders to the art of farriering and cow-leeching, yet many of them are very ignorant, especially in the country. Mortimer's Husbandry.

COW-WEED. n. s. [cow and weed.] A species of chervil.

COW-WHEAT. n. s. [cow and wheat.] A plant.

CO'WARD. n. s. [couard, Fr. of uncertain derivation.]

1. A poltroon; a wretch whose predominant passion is fear.

Pyrocles did such wonders, beyond belief, as was able to lead Musidorus to courage, though he had been born a coward. Sidney.

There was a soldier that vaunted, before Julius Cæsar, of the hurts he had received in his face. Cæsar, knowing him to be but a coward, told him, You were best take heed, next time you run away, how you look back. Bacon.

Some are brave one day, and cowards another, as great captains have often told me, from their own experience and observation. Temple.

A coward does not always escape with disgrace, but sometimes also he loses his life. South.

Tremble ye not, oh friends! and cowards fly,
Doom'd by the stern Telemachus to die!
Pope's Odyssey.

2. It is sometimes used in the manner of an adjective.

Having more man than wit about me, I drew;
And rais'd the house with loud and couard cries.
Shakesp

Invading fears repel my coward joy,
And ills foreseen the present bliss destroy. Prior.

CO'WARDICE. n. s. [from coward.] Fear; habitual timidity; pusillanimity; want of courage.

Certes, Sir knight, ye been too much to blame,
Thus for to blot the honour of the dead;
And with foul cowardice his carcase shame,
Whose living hands immortaliz'd his name.
Fairy Queen.

Gallant and fearless courage will turn into a native and heroick valour, and make them hate the cowardice of doing wrong. Milton on Education.

None was disgrac'd; for falling is no shame,
And cowardice alone is loss of fame:
The vent'rous knight is from the saddle thrown,
But 'tis the fault of fortune, not his own.
Dryden's Fables.

This great, this holy, this terrible Being, is present to all our affections; sees every treacherous inclination of our heart to desert his service; and treasures up, against the day of his wrath, the secret cowardice which deters us from asserting his cause, which prevails on us to compliment the vices of the great, to applaud the libertine, and laugh with the profane. Rogers's Sermons.

CO'WARDLINESS. n. s. [from cowardly.] Timidity; cowardice.

CO'WARDLY. adj. [from coward.]

1. Fearful; timorous; pusillanimous.

An Egyptian soothsayer made Antonius believe that his genius, otherwise brave and confident, was in the presence of Octavius poor and cowardly. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

2. Mean; befitting a coward; proceeding from fear.

I do find it cowardly and vile,
For fear of what might fall, so to prevent
The time of life. Shakesp. Julius Cæsar.

Let all such as can enlarge their consciences like hell, and style a cowardly silence in Christ's cause discretion, know, that Christ will one day scorn them. South.

CO'WARDLY. adv. In the manner of a coward; meanly; vilely.

He sharply reproved them as men of no courage, who had most cowardly turned their backs upon their enemies. Knolles.

CO'WARDSHIP. n. s. [from coward.] The character or qualities of a coward; meanness: a word not now in use.

A very paltry boy, and more a coward than a hare; his dishonesty appears in leaving his friend here in necessity, and denying him; and for his cowardship, ask Fabian. Shakesp.

To CO'WER. v. n. [cwrrian, Welsh; courber, Fr. or perhaps borrowed from the manner in which a cow sinks on her knees.] To sink by bending the knees; to stoop; to shrink.

Let the pail be put over the man's head above water, then he cower down, and the pail be pressed down with him. Bacon.

The splitting rocks cow'r'd in the sinking sands
And would not dash me with their ragged sides.
Shakesp.

As thus he spake, each bird and beast beheld,
Approaching two and two; these cow'ring low
With blandishment, each bird stoop'd on his wing. Milton.

Our dame sits cow'ring o'er a kitchen fire,
I draw fresh air, and nature's works admire Dryd.

CO'WISH. adj. [from To cow, to awe.] Timorous; fearful; mean; pusillanimous; cowardly. Not in use.

It is the cowish terrour of his spirit,
That dares not undertake: he'll not feel wrongs
Which tie him to an answer. Shak. King Lear.

CO'WKEEPER. n. s. [cow and keeper.] One whose business is to keep cows.

The terms cowkeeper and hogherd are not to be used in our poetry; but there are no finer words in the Greek language. Broome.

COWL. n. s. [cuȝle, Saxon; cucullus, Lat.]

1. A monk's hood.

You may imagine that Francis Cornfield did scratch his elbow, when he had sweetly invented, to signify his name, saint Francis with his friery cowel in a cornfield. Camden.

What differ more, you cry, than crown and cowl?
I'll tell you, friend, a wise man and a fool. Pope.

2. [Perhaps from cool, cooler, a vessel in which hot liquor is set to cool.] A vessel in which water is carried on a pole between two.

COWL-STAFF. n. s. [cowl and staff.] The staff on which a vessel is supported between two men.

Mounting him upon a cowl-staff,
Which (tossing him something high)
He apprehended to be Pegasus. Suckling.

The way by a cowl-staff is safer: the staff must have a bunch in the middle, somewhat wedgelike, and covered with a soft bolster. Wiseman.

CO'WSLIP. n. s. [paralysis; cuꝑlippe, Sax. as some think, from their resemblance of scent to the breath of a cow; perhaps from growing much in pasture grounds, and often meeting the cow's lip.]

Cowslip is also called pagil, grows wild in the meadows, and is a species of primrose. Miller.

He might as well say, that a cowslip is as white as a lily. Sidney.

Where the bee sucks, there suck I;
In a cowslip's bell I lie. Shak. Tempest.

Thy little sons
Permit to range the pastures: gladly they
Will mow the cowslip posies, faintly sweet.
Philips.

COWS-LUNGWORT. n. s. A species of Mullein.

CO'XCOMB. n. s. [cock and comb, corrupted from cock's comb.]

1. The top of the head.

As the cockney did to the eels, when she put them i' the pasty alive; she rapt them o' th' coxcombs with a stick, and cried, Down, wantons, down! Shakesp. King Lear.

2. The comb resembling that of a cock, which licensed fools wore formerly in their caps.

There, take my coxcomb: why, this fellow has banished two of his daughters, and did the third a blessing against his will: if thou follow him, thou must needs wear my coxcomb. Shakesp.

3. A fop; a superficial pretender to knowledge or accomplishments.

I sent to her,
By this same coxcomb that we have i' th' wind,
Tokens and letters which she did resend. Shak.

I scorn, quoth she, thou coxcomb silly,
Quarter or council from a foe. Hudibras.

It is a vanity for every pretending coxcomb to make himself one of the party still with his betters. L'Estrange.

They overflowed with smart repartees, and were only distinguished from the intended wits by being called coxcombs, though they deserved not so scandalous a name. Dryden.

Some are bewilder'd in the maze of schools,
And some made coxcombs, nature meant but fools.
Pope.

4. A kind of red flower.

COXCO'MICAL. adj. [from coxcomb.] Foppish; conceited: a low word, unworthy of use.

Because, as he was a very natural writer, and they were without prejudice, without prepossession, without affectation, and without the influence of coxcomical, senseless cabal, they were at liberty to receive the impressions which things naturally made on their minds. Dennis.

COY. [coi, Fr. from quietus, Lat.]

1. Modest; decent.

Jason is as coy as is a maide;
He looked piteously, but nought he said. Chaucer

2. Reserved; not accessible; not easily condescending to familiarity.

And vain delight she saw he light did pass,
A foe of folly and immodest toy;
Still solemn sad, or still disdainful coy. Spenser

Like Phœbus sung the no less am'rous boy:
Like Daphne she, as lovely, and as coy. Waller.

At this season every smile of the sun, like the smile of a coy lady, is as dear as it is uncommon. Pope.

The Nile's coy source. Granger.

To COY. v. n. [from the adjective.]

1. To behave with reserve; to reject familiarity.

What, coying it again!
No more; but make me happy to my gust,
That is, without your struggling. Dryd. K. Arthur.

Retire! I beg you, leave me.——
——Thus to coy it!
With one who knows you too! Rowe's J. Shore.

2. To make difficulty; not to condescend willingly.

If he coy'd
To hear Cominius speak, I'll keep at home,
Shakesp. Coriolanus.

To COY. v. a. [for decoy.] To allure. Not in use.

I'll mountebank their loves,
Coy their hearts from them, and come home beloved
Of all the trades in Rome. Shakesp. Coriolanus.

COYLY. adv. [from coy.] With reserve; with disinclination to familiarity.

This said, his hand he coyly snatch'd away
From forth Antinous' hand. Chapman's Odyssey.

CO'YNESS. n. s. [from coy] Reserve; unwillingness to become familiar.

When the sun hath warmed the earth and water, three or four male carps will follow a female; and she putting on a seeming coyness, they force her through weeds and flags Walton.

When the kind nymph would coyness feign,
And hides but to be found again. Dryden.

COYSTREL. n. s. A species of degenerate hawk.

One they might trust, their common wrongs to wreak:
The musquet and the coystrel were too weak,
Too fierce the falcon. Dryd. Hind and Panther.

COZ. n. s. A cant or familiar word, contracted from cousin.

Be merry, coz; since sudden sorrow
Serves to say thus, some good thing comes to-morrow. Shakesp.

To COZEN. v. a. [To cose is in the old Scotch dialect, as Junius observes, to chop or change; whence cozen to cheat; because in such traffick there is commonly fraud.] To cheat; to trick; to defraud.

Let the queen pay never so fully, let the muster-master view them never so diligently, let the deputy or general look to them never so exactly, yet they can cozen them all. Spenser.

Goring loved no man so well but that he would cozen him, and expose him to publick mirth for having been cozened. Clarendon.

He that suffers a government to be abused by carelessness or neglect, does the same thing with him that maliciously and corruptly sets himself to cozen it. L'Estrange.

You are not obliged to a literal belief of what the poet says; but you are pleased with the image, without being cozened by the fiction. Dryden

What if I please to lengthen out his date
A day, and take a pride to cozen fate.
Dryden's Aurengzebe.

Children may be cozened into a knowledge of the letters, and be taught to read, without perceiving it to be any thing but a sport.
Locke on Education.

COZENAGE. n. s. [from cozen.] Fraud; deceit; artifice; fallacy; trick; cheat; the practice of cheating.

They say this town is full of cozenage,
As nimble jugglers that deceive the eye,
Disguised cheaters. Shakesp.

Wisdom without honesty is meer craft and cozenage; and therefore the reputation of honesty must first be gotten, which cannot be but by living well; a good life is a main argument.
Ben Jonson's Discoveries.

There's no such thing as that we beauty call,
It is meer cozenage all,
For though some long ago
Lik'd certain colours mingled so and so,
That doth not tie me now from chusing new.
Suckling.

Imaginary appearances offer themselves to our impatient minds, which entertain these counterfeits, without the least suspicion of their cozenage.
Glanville's Scepsis.

Strange coz'nage! none would live past years again,
Yet all hope pleasure in what yet remains;
And from the dregs of life think to receive
What the first sprightly running could not give.
Dryden's Aurengzebe.

But all these are trifles, if we consider the fraud
And cozenage of trading men and shopkeepers.
Swift.

CO'ZENER. n. s. [from cozen.] A cheater; a defrauder.

Indeed, Sir, there are cozeners abroad, and therefore it behoves men to be wary.
Shakesp. Winter's Tale.

CRAB. n. s. [crabba, Sax. krabbe, Dut.]

1. A crustaceous fish.

Those that cast their shell are, the lobster, the crab, the crawfish, the hodmandod or dodman, and the tortoise. The old shells are never found; so as it is like they scale off and crumble away by degrees. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

The fox catches crab fish with his tail, which Olaus Magnus saith he himself was an eye witness of. Derham.

2. A wild apple; the tree that bears a wild apple.

Noble stock
Was graft with crab tree slip, whose fruit thou art.
Shakesp.

Fetch me a dozen crab tree staves, and strong ones; these are but switches. Shakesp. Henry VIII.

When roasted crabs hiss in the bowl,
Then nightly sings the staring owl. Shakesp.

Tell why a graft, taking nourishment from a crab stock, shall have a fruit more noble than its nurse and parent. Taylor.

3. A peevish morose person.

4. A wooden engine with three claws for launching of ships, or heaving them into the dock. Phillips.

5. The sign in the zodiack.

Then parts the Twins and Crab, the Dog divides,
And Argo's keel, that broke the frothy tides.
Creech.

CRAB. adj. It is used by way of contempt for any sour or degenerate fruit; as, a crab cherry, a crab plum.

Better cleanings their worn soil can boast
Than the crab vintage of the neighb'ring coast.
Dryden.

CRA'BBED. adj. [from crab.]

1. Peevish; morose: cynical; sour.

A man of years, yet fresh as mote appear,
Of swarth complexion, and of crabbed hue,
That him full of melancholy did shew. Spenser.

O, she is
Ten times more gentle than her father's crabbed;
And he's compos'd of harshness. Shak. Tempest.

2. Harsh; unpleasing.

That was when
Three crabbed months had sour'd themselves to death,
Ere I could make thee open thy white hand,
And clepe thyself my love. Shak. Winter's Tale.

How charming is divine philosophy!
Not harsh and crabbed, as dull fools suppose,
But musical as is Apollo's lute,
And a perpetual feast of nectar'd sweets,
Where no crude surfeit reigns. Milton.

3. Difficult; perplexing.

Beside, he was a shrewd philosopher,
And had read ev'ry text and gloss over;
Whate'er the crabbed'st author hath,
He understood b' implicit faith. Hudibras.

Lucretius had chosen a subject naturally crabbed.
Dryden.

Your crabbed rogues that read Lucretius
Are against gods, you know. Prior.

CRA'BBEDLY. adv. [from crabbed.] Peevishly; morosely; with perplexity.

2. Sourness of countenance; asperity of manners.

3. Difficulty; perplexity.

CRA'BER. n. s.

The poor fish have enemies enough, beside such unnatural fishermen as otters, the cormorant, and the craber, which some call the water-rat.
Walton's Angler

CRABS-EYES. n. s. Whitish bodies, rounded on one side, and depressed on the other, heavy, moderately hard, and without smell. They are not the eyes of any creature, nor do they belong to the crab, but are produced by the common crawfish: the stones are bred in two separate bags, one on each side of the stomach. They are alkaline, absorbent, and in some degree diuretick. Hill.

Several persons had, in vain, endeavoured to store themselves with crabs-eyes. Boyle.

CRACK. n. s. [kraeck, Dut.]

1. A sudden disruption, by which the parts are separated but a little way from each other.

2. The chink; fissure, or vacuity made by disruption; a narrow breach.

Contusions, when great, do usually produce a fissure or crack of the skull, either in the same part where the blow was inflicted, or in the contrary part. Wiseman.

At length it would crack in many places; and those cracks, as they dilated, would appear of a pretty good, but yet obscure and dark, sky-colour. Newton's Opticks.

3. The sound of any body bursting or falling.

If I say sooth, I must report they were
As cannons overcharg'd with double cracks.
Shakesp Macbeth.

Now day appears, and with the day the king,
Whose early care had robb'd him of his rest:
Far off the cracks of falling houses ring,
And shrieks of subjects pierce his tender breast.
Dryden.

4. Any sudden and quick sound.

A fourth?—start eye!
What! will the line stretch out to th' crack of doom? Shakesp.

Vulcan was employed in hammering out thunderbolts, that every now and then flew up from the anvil with dreadful cracks and flashes.
Addison.

5. Change of the voice in puberty.

And let us, Paladour, though now our voices,
Have got the mannish crack, sing him to th' ground. Shakesp.

Believe this crack to be in my dread mistress,
So sovereignly being honourable.
Shak. Winter's Tale.

7. Craziness of intellect.

8. A man crazed.

I have invented projects for raising millions, without burthening the subject; but cannot get the parliament to listen to me, who look upon me as a crack and a projector. Addison.

9. A whore in low language.

10. A boast.

Leasings, backbitings, and vain-glorious cracks,
All those against that fort did bend their batteries.
Spenser.

11. A boaster. This is only in low phrase.

To CRACK. v. a. [kraecken, Dut.]

1. To break into chinks; to divide the parts a little from each other.

Look to your pipes, and cover them with fresh and warm litter out of the stable, a good thickness, lest the frost crack them. Mortimer.

2. To break; to split.

O, madam, my heart is crack'd, it's crack'd.
Shakesp.

Thou wilt quarrel with a man for cracking nuts, having no other reason but because thou hast hazel eyes. Shakesp.

Should some wild fig-tree take her native bent,
And heave below the gaudy monument,
Would crack the marble titles, and disperse
The characters of all the lying verse. Dryd. Juv.

Or as a lute, which in moist weather rings
Her knell alone, by cracking of her strings. Donne.

Honour is like that glassy bubble,
That finds philosophers such trouble;
Whose least part crack'd, the whole does fly,
And wits are crack'd to find out why. Hudibras.

3. To do any thing with quickness or smartness.

Sir Balaam now, he lives like other folks;
He takes his chirping pint, he cracks his jokes. Pope.

4. To break or distroy any thing.

You'll crack a quart together! Ha, will you not? Shakesp.

Love cools, friendship falls off, brothers divide: in cities, mutinies; in countries, discord; in palaces, treason; and the bond cracked 'twixt son and father. Shakesp. King Lear.

5. To craze; to weaken the intellect.

I was ever of opinion, that the philosopher's stone, and an holy war, were but the rendezvous of cracked brains, that wore their feather in their heads. Bacon's Holy War.

He thought none poets till their brains were crackt. Roscommon.

To* CRACK. v. n.

1. To burst; to open in chinks.

By misfortune it cracked in the cooling, whereby we were reduced to make use of one part, which was straight and intire. Boyle.

I will board her, though she chide as loud
As thunder, when the clouds in autumn crack. Shakesp.

4. To boast: with of.

To look like her, are chimney-sweepers black,
And since her time are colliers counted bright,
And Ethiops of their sweet complexion crack.
Dark needs no candles now, for dark is light. Shakesp.

CRACK-BRAINED. adj. [crack and brained.] Crazy; without right reason.

We have sent you an answer to the ill-grounded sophisms of those crack-brained fellows. Arbuthnot and Pope.

CRACK-HEMP. n. s. [crack and hemp.] A wretch fated to the gallows; a crack-rope: furcifer.

Come hither, crack-hemp.
——I hope I may chuse, Sir.
Come hither, you rogue:
What, have you forgot me? Shakesp. Taming of the Shrew.

CRACK-ROPE. n. s. [crack and rope.] A fellow that deserves hanging.

CRA'CKER. n. s. [from crack.]

1. A noisy boasting fellow.

What cracker is this same that deafs our ears
With this abundance of superfluous breath? Shakesp. King John.

2. A quantity of gunpowder confined so as to burst with great noise.

The bladder, at its breaking, gave a great report, almost like a cracker. Boyle.

And when, for furious haste to run,
They durst not stay to fire a gun,
Have done 't with bonfires, and at home
Made squibs and crackers overcome. Hudibras

Then furious he begins his march,
Drives rattling o'er a brazen arch,
With squibs and crackers arm'd, to throw
Among the trembling crowd below. Swift.

To* CRA'CKLE. v. n. [from crack.] To make slight cracks; to make small and frequent noises; to decrepitate.

All these motions, which we saw,
Are but as ice which crackles at a thaw. Donne.

I fear to try new love,
As boys to venture on the unknown ice
That crackles underneath them. Dryden.

Caught her dishevell'd hair and rich attire;
Her crown and jewels crackled in the fire.
Dryden's Æneid.

Marrow is a specifick in that scurvy which occasions a crackling of the bones; in which case marrow performs its natural function of moistening them. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

CRA'CKNEL. n. s. [from crack.] A hard brittle cake.

Albee my love he seek with daily suit,
His clownish gifts and curtesies I disdain,
His kids, his cracknels, and his early fruit.
Spenser.

Pay tributary cracknels, which he sells;
And with our offerings help to raise his vails.
Dryden's Juvenal.

CRA'DLE. n. s. [cnabel, Sax.]

1. A moveable bed, on which children or sick persons are agitated with a smooth and equal motion, to make them sleep.

She had indeed, Sir, a son for her cradle, ere she had a husband for her bed. Shakesp. King Lear.

No jutting frieze,
Buttrice, nor coigne of vantage, but this bird
Hath made his pendant bed and procreant cradle.
Shakesp.

His birth perhaps, some paltry village hides,
And sets his cradle out of fortune's way. Dryden.

A child knows his nurse and his cradle, and by degrees the playthings of a little more advanced age. Locke.

The cradle and the tomb, alas, so nigh!
To live is scarce distinguish'd from to die. Prior.

Me let the tender office long engage,
To rock the cradle of reposing age;
With lenient arts extend a mother's breath,
Make languor smile, and smooth the bed of death.
Pope.

2. It is used for infancy, or the first part of life.

He knew them to be inclined altogether to war, and therefore wholly trained them up, even from their cradles, in arms and military exercises. Spenser's Ireland.

The new duke's daughter, her cousin, loves her; being ever, from their cradles, bred together

To* CRA'DLE. v. a. [from the substantive.] To lay in a cradle; to rock in a cradle.

He that hath been cradled in majesty, will not leave the throne to play with beggars.
Glanville's Apollonius.

The tears steal from our eyes, when in the street
With some betrothed virgin's herse we meet;
Or infant's fun'ral, from the cheated womb
Convey'd to earth, and cradled in a tomb. Dryden.

He shall be cradled in my ancient shields, so famous through the universities. Arbuthnot and Pope.

CRADLE-CLOTHES. n. s. [from cradle and clothes.] Bed-clothes belonging to a cradle.

O could it be prov'd
That some night-tripping fairy had exchang'd,
In cradle-cloaths, our children, where they lay,
And call mine Percy, his Plantagenet;
Then would I have his Harry, and he mine. Shak.

CRAFT. n. s. [cnæft, Sax. creft, in old Welsh.]

1. Manual art; trade.

I hear an objection, even from some well-meaning men, that these delightful crafts may be divers ways ill applied in a land. Wotton's Architecture.

2. Art; ability; dexterity.

A poem is the work of the poet; poesy is his skill or craft of making, the very fiction itself of the work. Ben Jonson.

3. Fraud; cunning; artifice.

The offence is holy that she hath committed;
And this deceit loses the name of craft,
Of disobedience, or unduteous title. Shakesp.

This gives us a full view of wonderful art and craft in raising such a structure of power and iniquity. Ayliffe.

4. Small sailing vessels.

To* CRAFT. v. n. [from the noun.] To play tricks; to practise artifice. Now out of use.

You 've made fair hands,
You and your crafts! You 've crafted fair.
Shakesp Coriolanus.

CRA'FTILY. adv. [from crafty.] Cunningly; artfully; with more art than honesty.

But that which most impaired his credit, was the common report that he did, in all things, favour the Christians; and had, for that cause, craftily persuaded Solyman to take in hand the unfortunate Persian war. Knolles.

May he not craftily infer
The rule of friendship too severe,
Which chain him to a hated trust;
Which make him wretched to be just? Prior

CRA'FTINESS. n. s. [from crafty.] Cunning; stratagem.

He taketh the wise in their own craftiness. Job.

CRA'FTSMAN. n. s. [craft and man.] An artificer; a manufacturer; a mechanick.

CRA'NIUM. n. s. [Lat.] The skull.

In wounds made by contusion, when the cranium is a little naked, you ought not presently to crowd in dossils; for if that contused flesh be well digested, the bone will incarn with the wound without much difficulty. Wiseman's Surgery.

CRANK. n. s. [This word is perhaps a contraction of crane-neck, to which it may bear some resemblance, and is part of the instrument called a crane.]

1. A crank is the end of an iron axis turned square down, and again turned square to the first turning down; so that on the last turning down a leather thong is slipt, to tread the treddle-wheel about. Moxon.

2. Any bending or winding passage.

I send it through the rivers of your blood,
Even to the court, the heart to th' seat o' th' brain;
And through the cranks and offices of man,
The strongest nerves, and small inferiour veins,
From me receive that natural competency,
Whereby they live. Shakesp. Coriolanus.

3. Any conceit formed by twisting or changing, in any manner, the form or meaning of a word.

Haste thee, nymph, and bring with thee
Jest and youthful jollity,
Quips and cranks, and wanton wiles,
Nods and becks, and wreathed smiles,
Such as hang on Hebe's cheek,
And love to live in dimple sleek. Milton.

CRANK. adj. [from onkranck, Dut. Skinner.]

1. Healthy; sprightly: sometimes corrupted to cranky. Not in use.

Mr. Warburton has it, crush a cup of wine.

To crash, says Hanmer, is to be merry: a crash being a word still used in some counties for a merry bout. It is surely better to read crack. See CRACK.

CRASH. n. s. [from the verb.] A loud sudden mixed sound, as of many things broken at the same time.

Senseless Ilium,
Seeming to feel this blow, with flaming top
Stoops to his base; and, with a hideous crash,
Takes prisoner Pyrrhus' ear. Shakesp. Hamlet.

Moralizing sat I by the hazard-table: I looked upon the uncertainty of riches, the decay of beauty, and the Crash of worlds, with as much contempt as ever Plato did. Pope.

CRA'SIS. n. s. [κρᾶσις.] Temperature; constitution arising from the various properties of humours.

The fancies of men are so immediately diversified by the individual crasis, that every man owns something wherein none is like him. Glanville.

A man may be naturally inclined to pride, lust, and anger; as these inclinations are founded in a peculiar crasis and constitution of the blood and spirits. South.

CRASS. adj. [crassus, Lat.] Gross; coarse; not thin; not comminuted; not subtle; not consisting of small parts.

Iron, in aquafortis, will fall into ebullition, with noise and emication; as also a crass and fumid exhalation, caused from the combat of the sulphur of iron with the acid and nitrous spirits of aquafortis. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

Metals are intermixed with the common terrestrial matter, so as not to be discoverable by human industry; or, if discoverable, so diffused and scattered amongst the crasser and more unprofitable matter, that it would never be possible to separate and extract it. Woodward's Natural History.

CRA'SSITUDE. n. s. [crassitudo, Lat.] Grossness; coarseness; thickness.

They must be but thin, as a leaf, or a piece of paper or parchment; for, if they have a greater crassitude, they will alter in their own body, though they spend not. Bacon.

The Dead Sea, which vomiteth up bitumen, is of that crassitude, as living bodies, bound hand and foot, cast into it, have been borne up, and not sunk. Bacon's Natural History.

The terrestrial matter carried by rivers into the sea, is sustained therein partly by the greater crassitude and gravity of the sea-water, and partly by its constant agitation. Woodward.

CRASTINA'TION. n. s. [from cras, Lat. to-morrow.] Delay. Dict.

CRATCH. n. s. [creche, Fr. crates, Lat.] The palisaded frame in which hay is put for cattle.

Hakewill on Providence.

CRAVA'T. n. s. [of uncertain etymology.] A neckcloth; any thing worn about the neck.

Less delinquents have been scourg'd,
And hemp on wooden anvils forg'd;
Which others for cravats have worn
About their necks, and took a turn. Hudibras.

The restrictives were applied, one over another, to her throat: then we put her on a cravat.
Wiseman's Surgery.

To CRAVE. v. a. [cpapian, Sax.]

1. To ask with earnestness; to ask with submission; to beg; to entreat.

What one petition is there found in the whole Litany, whereof we shall ever be able at any time to say, that no man living needeth the grace or benefit therein craved at God's hands? Hooker.

As for my nobler friends, I crave their pardons;
But for the mutable rank-scented many,
Let them regard me as I do not flatter.
Shakesp. Coriolanus

The poor people, not knowing where to hide themselves from the fury of their enemies, nor of whom to crave help, fled as men and women dismayed. Knolles

I would crave leave here, under the word action, to comprehend the forbearance too of any action proposed. Locke.

Each ardent nymph the rising current craves,
Each shepherd's pray'r retards the parting waves.
Prior.

2. To ask insatiably.

The subjects arm'd, the more their princes gave,
Th' advantage only took the more to crave.
Denham.

Him dost thou mean, who, spite of all his store,

Who cheats for halfpence, and who doffs his coat
To save a farthing in a ferry-boat? Dryd. Persius.

3. To long; to wish unreasonably.

Levity pushes us on from one vain desire to another, in a regular vicissitude and succession of cravings and satiety. L'Estrange.

He is actually under the power of a temptation, and the sway of an impetuous lust; both hurrying him to satisfy the cravings of it by some wicked action. South.

4. To call for importunately.

Bestow
Your needful counsel to our businesses,
Which crave the instant use. Shakesp. King Lear.

The antecedent concomitants and effects of such a constitution, are acids, taken in too great quantities; sour eructations, and a craving appetite, especially of terrestrial and absorbent substances.
Arbuthnot on Aliments.

5. Sometimes with for before the thing sought.

Once one may crave for love,
But more would prove
This heart too little, that too great. Suckling.

CRA'VEN. n. s. [derived by Skinner from crave, as one that craves or begs his life: perhaps it comes originally from the noise made by a conquered cock.]

1. A cock conquered and dispirited.

What, is your crest a coxcomb?——
——A combless cock, so Kate will be my hen.
—No cock of mine; you crow too like a craven.
Shakesp.

2. A coward; a recreant; a weak-hearted spiritless fellow.

Is it fit this soldier keep his oath?
——He is a craven and a villain else. Shak. H. V.

CRA'VEN. adj. Cowardly; base.

Upon his coward breast
A bloody cross, and on his craven crest
A bunch of hairs discolour'd diversly. Spenser.

Whether it be
Bestial oblivion, or some craven scruple,
Of thinking too precisely on th' event;
A thought which, quarter'd, hath but one part wisdom,
And ever three parts coward. Shakesp. Hamlet.

Yet if the innocent some mercy find,
From cowardice, not ruth, did that proceed;
His noble foes durst not his craven kind
Exasperate by such a bloody deed. Fairfax.

To CRA'VEN. v. a. [from the noun.] To make recreant or cowardly.

'Gainst self-slaughter
There is a prohibition so divine,
That cravens my weak hand. Shakesp. Cymbeline.

CRA'VER. n. s. [from crave.] An insatiable asker. It is used in Clarissa.

I saw them under a green mantling vine,
That crawls along the side of you small hill.
Milton.

That crawling insect, who from mud began;
Warm'd by my beams, and kindled into man!
Dryden.

The streams, but just contain'd within their bounds,
By slow degrees into their channels crawl;
And earth increases as the waters fall. Dryden.

A worm finds what it searches after, only by feeling, as it crawls from one thing to another.
Grew's Cosmologia.

The vile worm, that yesterday began
To crawl; thy fellow-creature, abject man. Prior.

2. To move weakly and slowly, or timorously.

'Tis our first intent
To shake all cares and business from our age,
While we unburthen'd crawl tow'rd death.
Shakesp. King Lear.

They like tall fellows crept out of the holes; and secretly crawling up the battered walls of the fort, got into it. Knolles.

For the fleets of Solomon and the kings of Egypt, it is very apparent they went with great leisure, and crawled close by the shore-side.
Heylyn.

A look so pale no quartane ever gave;
Thy dwindled legs seem crawling to a grave.
Dryden's Juvenal.

He was hardly able to crawl about the room, far less to look after a troublesome business.
Arbuthnot's John Bull.

Man is a very worm by birth,
Vile reptile, weak and vain!
A while he crawls upon the earth,
Then shrinks to earth again. Pope.

It will be very necessary for the threadbare gownman, and every child who can crawl, to watch the fields at harvest-time. Swift.

Relent, sweet Hermia; and, Lysander, yield
Thy crazed title to my certain right. Shakesp

Till length of years,
And sedentary numbness, craze my limbs.
Milton.

Then through the fiery pillar, and the cloud,
God looking forth, will trouble all his host,
And craze their chariot wheels. Milton.

2. To powder.

The tin ore passeth to the crazing mill, which, between two grinding stones, bruiseth it to a fine sand. Carew's Survey.

3. To crack the brain; to impair the intellect.

I lov'd him, friend,
No father his son dearer, true, to tell thee,
That grief hath craz'd my wits. Shakesp. King Lear.

Wickedness is a kind of voluntary frenzy, and a chosen distraction; and every sinner does wilder and more extravagant things than any man can do that is crazed and out of his wits; only with this sad difference, that he knows better what he does. Tillotson.

CRA'ZEDNESS. n. s. [from crazed.] Decrepitude; brokenness; diminution of intellect.

The nature, as of men that have sick bodies, so likewise of the people in the crazedness of their minds, possessed with dislike and discontentment at things present, is to imagine that any thing would help them. Hooker.

CRA'ZINESS. n. s. [from crazy.]

1. State of being crazy; imbecility; weakness.

Touching other places, she may be said to hold them as one should do a wolf by the ears; nor will I speak now of the craziness of her title to many of them. Howel's Vocal Forest.

2. Weakness of intellect.

CRA'ZY. adj. [ecrazé, Fr.]

1. Broken; decrepit.

Come, my lord,
We will bestow you in some better place,

To* CREAK. v. n. [corrupted for crack.]

1. To make a harsh protracted noise.

Let not the creaking of shoes, nor the rustling of silks, betray thy poor heart to women.
Shakesp. King Lear.

No door there was th' unguarded house to keep,
On creaking hinges turn'd, to break his sleep. Dryd.

2. It is sometimes used of animals.

The creaking locusts with my voice conspire,
They fried with heat, and I with fierce desire.
Dryden.

CREAM. n. s. [cremor, Lat.]

1. The unctuous or oily part of milk, which, when it is cold, floats on the top, and is changed by the agitation of the churn into butter; the flower of milk.

It is not your inky brows, your black silk hair,
Your bugle eye-balls, nor your cheek of cream,
That can entame my spirits to your worship.
Shakesp.

I am as vigilant as a cat to steal cream.
Shakesp. Henry IV.

Cream is matured and made to rise speedily, by putting in cold water; which, as it seemeth, getteth down the whey. Bacon's Natural History.

How the drudging goblin swet,
To earn his cream-bowl duly set;
When in one night, ere glimpse of morn,
His shadowy flail hath thresh'd the corn. Milton.

Let your various creams incircled be
With swelling fruit, just ravish'd from the tree.
King.

Milk, standing some time, naturally separates into an oily liquor called cream; and a thinner, blue, and more ponderous liquor, called skimmed milk. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

2. It is used for the best part of any thing: as, the cream of a jest.

To* CREAM. v. n. [from the noun.] To gather cream.

There are a sort of men, whose visages
Do cream and mantle like a standing pond;
And do a wilful stiffness entertain,
With purpose to be drest in an opinion
Of wisdom, gravity, profound conceit.
Shakesp Merchant of Venice.

To* CREAM. v. a. [from the noun]

1. To skim off the cream.

2. To take the flower and quintessence of any thing: so used somewhere by Swift.

CREASE. n. s. [from creta, Lat. chalk. Skinner.] A mark made by doubling any thing.

Men of great parts are unfortunate in business, because they go out of the common road. I once desired lord Bolingbroke to observe, that the clerks used an ivory knife, with a blunt edge, to divide paper, which cut it even, only requiring a strong hand; whereas a sharp penknife would go out of the crease, and disfigure the paper. Swift.

To* CRE'ASE. v. a. [from the noun.] To mark any thing by doubling it, so as to leave the impression.

To* CREATE. v. a. [creo, Lat.]

1. To form out of nothing; to cause to exist.

In the beginning God created the heaven and the earth. Genesis.

We having but imperfect ideas of the operations of our minds, and much imperfecter yet of the operations of God, run into great difficulties about free created agents, which reason cannot well extricate itself out of. Locke.

2. To produce; to cause; to be the occasion of.

Now is the time of help: your eye in Scotland
Would create soldiers, and make women fight.
Shakesp.

His abilities were prone to create in him great confidence of undertakings, and this was like enough to betray him to great errours and many enemies. King Charles.

They eclipse the clearest truths by difficulties of their own creating, or no man could miss his way to heaven for want of light. Decay of Piety.

None knew, till guilt created fear,
What darts or poison'd arrows were.
Roscommon.

Must I new bars to my own joy create,
Refuse myself what I had forc'd from fate?
Dryden's Aurengzebe.

Long abstinence is troublesome to acid constitutions, by the uneasiness it creates in the stomach. Arbuthnot.

3. To beget.

And the issue there create
Ever shall be fortunate. Shakesp.

Arise, my knights o' th' battle: I create you
Companions to our person, and will fit you
With dignities becoming your estates.
Shakesp. Cymbeline.

5. To give any new qualities; to put any thing in a new state.

The best British undertaker had but a proportion of three thousand acres for himself, with power to create a manor, and hold a court-baron. Davies on Ireland.

CREA'TION. n. s. [from create.]

1. The act of creating or conferring existence.

Consider the immensity of the Divine Love, expressed in all the emanations of his providence; in his creation, in his conservation of us. Taylor.

2. The act of investing with new qualities or character: as, the creation of peers.

3. The things created; the universe.

As subjects then the whole creation came,
And from their natures Adam them did name. Denham.

Such was the saint, who shone with ev'ry grace,
Reflecting, Moses-like, his master's face:
God saw his image lively was express'd,
And his own work as his creation bless'd.
Dryden's Fables.

Nor could the tender new creation bear
Th' excessive heats or coldness of the year.
Dryden's Virgil.

In days of yore, no matter where or when,
Before the low creation swarm'd with men. Parnel.

4. Any thing produced, or caused.

Art thou not, fatal vision, sensible
To feeling as to sight? Or art thou but
A dagger of the mind, a false creation,
Proceeding from the heat-oppressed brain?
Shakesp. Macbeth.

CREA'TIVE. adj. [from create.]

1. Having the power to create.

But come, ye generous minds, in whose wide thought,
Of all his works, creative beauty burns
With warmest beam. Thomson's Spring.

2. Exerting the act of creation.

To trace the outgoings of the Ancient of days in the first instance, and of his creative power, is a research too great for mortal enquiry. South.

CREA'TOR. n. s. [creator, Lat.] The being that bestows existence.

Open, ye heavens, your living doors; let in
The great Creator, from his work return'd
Magnificent; his six days work, a world. Milton.

When you lie down, close your eyes with a short prayer, commit yourself into the hands of your faithful Creator; and when you have done, trust him with yourself, as you must do when you are dying. Taylor's Guide to Devotion.

CRE'ATURE. n. s. [creatura, low Lat.]

1. A being not self-existent, but created by the supreme power.

God's first creature was light. Bacon's New. Atl.

Imperfect the world, and all the creatures in it, must be acknowledged in many respects to be. Tillotson.

3. An animal, not human.

The queen pretended satisfaction of her knowledge only in killing creatures vile, as cats and dogs. Shakesp. Cymbeline.

4. A general term for man.

Yet crime in her could never creature find;
But for his love, and for her own self sake,
She wander'd had from one to other Ind. Spenser.

Most cursed of all creatures under sky,
Lo, Tantalus, I here tormented lie. Spenser.

Though he might burst his lungs to call for help,
No creature would assist or pity him, Roscommon.

5. A word of contempt for a human being.

Hence! home, you idle creatures, get you home:
Is this a holiday? Shakesp. Julius Cæsar.

He would into the stews,
And from the common creatures pluck a glove,
And wear it as a favour. Shakesp. Rich. III.

I've heard that guilty creatures, at a play,
Have, by the very cunning of the scene,
Been struck so to the soul, that presently
They have proclaim'd their malefactions.
Shakesp. Hamlet.

Nor think to-night of thy ill nature,
But of thy follies, idle creature. Prior.

A good poet no sooner communicates his works, but it is imagined he is a vain young creature, given up to the ambition of fame. Pope.

6. A word of petty tenderness.

And then, Sir, would he gripe and wring my hand;
Cry, Oh sweet creature! and then kiss me hard.
Shakesp.

Ah, cruel creature, whom dost thou despise?
The gods, to live in woods, have left the skies.
Dryden's Virgil.

Some young creatures have learnt their letters and syllables by having them pasted upon little tablets. Watts.

CRE'BROUS. adj. [from creber, Lat.] Frequent. Dict.

CRE'DENCE. n. s. [from credo, Lat. credence, Norman, Fr.]

1. Belief; credit.

Ne let it seem that credence this exceeds,
For he that made the same was known right well
To have done much more admirable deeds;
It Merlin was. Spenser.

Love and wisdom,
Approv'd so to your majesty, may plead
For ample credence. Shakesp.

They did not only underhand give out that this was the true earl, but the friar, finding some credence in the people, took boldness in the pulpit to declare as much. Bacon.

2. That which gives a claim to credit or belief.

After they had delivered to the king their letters of credence, they were led to a chamber richly furnished. Hayward.

CREDENDA. n. s. [Lat.] Things to be believed; articles of faith: distinguished in theology from agenda, or practical duties.

That no particular scandal once can touch,
But it confounds the breather.
Shak. Measure for Measure

CREDE'NTIAL. n. s. [from credens, Lat.] That which gives a title to credit; the warrant upon which belief or authority is claimed.

A few persons of an odious and despised country could not have filled the world with believers, had they not shewn undoubted credentials from the Divine Person who sent them on such a message. Addison on the Christian Religion.

CREDIBI'LITY. n. s. [from credible.] Claim to credit; possibility of obtaining belief; probability.

The first of those opinions I shall shew to be altogether incredible, and the latter to have all the credibility and evidence of which a thing of that nature is capable. Tillotson.

Calculate the several degrees of credibility and conviction, by which the one evidence surpasseth the other. Atterbury.

CRE'DIBLE. adj. [credibilis, Lat.] Worthy of credit; deserving of belief; having a just claim to belief.

The ground of credit is the credibility of things credited; and things are made credible, either by the known condition and quality of the utterer, or by the manifest likelihood of truth in themselves. Hooker.

None can demonstrate to me, that there is such an island as Jamaica; yet, upon the testimony of credible persons, I am free from doubt. Tillotson.

CRE'DIBLENESS. n. s. [from credible.] Credibility; worthiness of belief; just claim to belief.

The credibleness of a good part of these narratives has been confirmed to me by a practiser of physick. Boyle.

CRE'DIBLY. adv. [from credible.] In a manner that claims belief.

This, with the loss of so few of the English as is scarce credible; being, as hath been rather confidently than credibly reported, but of one man, though not a few hurt. Bacon.

CRE'DIT. n. s. [credit, Fr.]

1. Belief faith yielded to another.

When the people heard these words, they gave no credit unto them, nor received them. 1 Mac. x 46.

I may give credit to reports. Addison's Spectator.

Some secret truths, from learned pride conceal'd,
To maids alone and children are reveal'd:
What though no credit doubting wits may give,
The fair and innocent shall still believe. Pope.

2. Honour; reputation.

I published, because I was told I might please such as it was a credit to please. Pope.

3. Esteem; good opinion.

There is no decaying merchant, or inward beggar, hath so many tricks to uphold the credit of their wealth, as these empty persons have to maintain the credit of their sufficiency. Bacon.

His learning, though a poet said it,
Before a play, would lose no credit. Swift.

Yes, while I live, no rich or noble knave
Shall walk the world in credit to his grave.
Pope's Horace.

4. Faith; testimony; that which procures belief.

We are contented to take this upon your credit, and to think it may be. Hooker.

2. Untowardly; not compliantly.

If we walk perversely with God, he will walk crookedly towards us. Taylor's Rule of Living Holy.

CROO'KEDNESS. n. s. [from crooked.]

1. Deviation from straightness; curvity; the state of being inflected; inflection.

He that knoweth what is straight, doth even thereby discern what is crooked; because the absence of straightness, in bodies capable thereof, is crookedness. Hooker.

2. Deformity of a gibbous body.

When the heathens offered a sacrifice to their false gods, they would make a severe search to see if there were any crookedness or spot, any uncleanness or deformity, in their sacrifice. Taylor's Worthy Communicant.

CROP. n. s. [crop, Sax.] The craw of a bird; the first stomach into which its meat descends.

In birds there is no mastication or comminution of the meat in the mouth; but in such as are not carnivorous, it is immediately swallowed into the crop or craw. Ray.

But fluttering there they nestle near the throne,
And lodge in habitations not their own,
By their high crops and corny gizzards known. Dryden.

CRO'PFULL. adj. [crop and full.] Satiated; with a full belly.

He, stretch'd out all the chimney's length,
Basks at the fire his hairy strength;
And, crop-full, out of door he flings
Ere the first cock his matin rings. Milton.

CRO'PSICK. adj. [crop and sick.] Sick with repletion; sick with excess and debauchery.

Strange odds! where crop-sick drunkards must engage
A hungry foe, and arm'd with sober rage. Tate's Juvenal.

CROP. n. s. [croppa, Sax.]

1. The highest part or end of any thing; as the head of a tree, the ear of corn.
2. The harvest; the corn gathered off a field; the product of the field.

And this of all my harvest hope I have,
Nought reaped but a weedy crop of care. Spenser's Pastorals.

Lab'ring the soil, and reaping plenteous crop,
Corn, wine, and oil. Milton's Paradise Lost.

The fountain which from Helicon proceeds,
That sacred stream, should never water weeds,
Nor make the crop of thorns and thistles grow. Roscommon.

Nothing is more prejudicial to your crop than mowing of it too soon. Mortimer's Husbandry.

3. Any thing cut off.

Guiltless of steel, and from the razor free,
It falls a plenteous crop reserv'd for thee. Dryden's Fables.

To CROP. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To cut off the ends of any thing; to mow; to reap; to lop.

Cropp'd are the flower-de-luces in your arms;
Of England's coat, one half is cut away.
Shakesp. Henry VI.

He, upon whose side
The fewest roses are cropp'd from the tree,
Shall yield the other in the right opinion.
Shakesp. Henry VI.

All the budding honours on thy crest
I'll crop, to make a garland for my head.
Shakesp. Henry IV.

I will crop off from the top of his young twigs a tender one, and will plant it upon an high mountain. Ezekiel, xvii. 22.

There are some tears of trees, which are combed from the beards of goats; for when the goats bite and crop them, especially in the mornings, the dew being on, the tear cometh forth, and hangeth upon their beards. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

No more, my goats, shall I behold you climb
The steepy cliffs, or crop the flow'ry thyme!
Dryden's Virgil.

2. To gather before it falls.

O fruit divine!
Sweet of thyself, but much more sweet thus cropp'd. Milton.

Age, like ripe apples, on earth's bosom drops;
While force our youth, like fruits, untimely crops.
Denham.

Death destroys
The parent's hopes, and crops the growing boys.
Creech.

To CROP. v. n. To yield harvest.

Royal wench!
She made great Cæsar lay his sword to-bed;
He plough'd her, and she cropt.
Shakesp. Antony and Cleopatra

CRO'PPER. n. s. [from crop.] A kind of pigeon, with a large crop.

There be tame and wild pigeons; and of tame there be croppers, carriers, runts. Walton's Angler.

CRO'SIER. n. s. [croiser, Fr. from croix, a cross.] The pastoral staff of a bishop, which has a cross upon it.

When prelates are great, there is also danger from them; as in the times of Anselmus and Thomas Becket, who, with their crosiers, did almost try it with the king's sword. Bacon.

Grievances there were, I must confess, and some incongruities in my civil government; wherein some say the crosier, some say the distaff, was too busy. Howel's England's Tears.

Her front erect with majesty she bore,
The crosier wielded, and the mitre wore. Dryd.

CRO'SLET. n. s. [croisselet, Fr.]

1. A small cross.

Then Una 'gan to ask, if aught he knew,
Or heard abroad, of that her champion true,
That in his armour bare a croslet red. Spenser.

Here an unfinish'd diamond croslet lay,
To which soft lovers adoration pay. Gay's Fan.

2. It seems to be printed in the following passage, by mistake, for corselet.

The croslet some, and some the cuishes mould,
With silver plated, and with ductile gold.
Dryden's Æneid.

CROSS. n. s. [croix, Fr. croce, Ital. crux, Lat.]

1. One straight body laid at right angles over another; the instrument by which the Saviour of the world suffered death.

They make a little cross of a quill, longways of that part of the quill which hath the pith, and crossways of that piece of the quill without pith.
Bacon's Nat. Hist.

You are first to consider seriously the infinite love of your Saviour, who offered himself for you as a sacrifice upon the cross.
Taylor's Guide to the Penitent.

Wishing unto me many crosses and mischances in my love, whensoever I should love. Sidney.

Then let us teach our trial patience,
Because it is a customary cross. Shakesp.

Heaven prepares good men with crosses; but no ill can happen to a good man. Ben Jonson's Discov.

A great estate hath great crosses, and a mean fortune hath but small ones.
Taylor's Rule of Living Holy.

6. Money, so called because marked with a cross.

He was said to make soldiers spring up out of the very earth to follow him, though he had not a cross to pay them salary. Howell's Vocal Forest.

Whereas we cannot much lament our loss,
Who neither carried back nor brought one cross.
Dryden.

7. Cross and Pile, a play with money; at which it is put to chance whether the side, which bears a cross, shall lie upward, or the other.

Whacum had neither cross nor pile;
His plunder was not worth the while. Hudibras.

This I humbly conceive to be perfect boys play; cross, I win, and pile, you lose; or, what's your's is mine, and what's mine is my own. Swift.

8. Church lands in Ireland.

The absolute palatines made their own judges, so as the king's writ did not run in those counties, but only in the church lands lying within the same, which were called the cross; wherein the king made a sheriff; so in each of these counties palatines there was one sheriff of the liberty, and another of the cross. Sir J. Davies.

CROSS. adj. [from the substantive.]

1. Transverse; falling athwart something else.

Whatsoever penumbra should be made in the circles by the cross refraction of the second prism, that penumbra would be conspicuous in the right lines which touch those circles. Newton.

The sun, in that space of time, by his annual contrary motion eastward, will be advanced near a degree of the ecliptick, cross to the motion of the equator. Holder on Time.

The ships must needs encounter, when they either advance towards one another in direct lines, or meet in the intersection of cross ones. Bentley.

2. Oblique; lateral.

Was this a face,
To stand against the deep dread-bolted thunder,
In the most terrible and nimble stroke
Of quick cross lightning? Shakesp. King Lear.

3. Adverse; opposite: often with to.

We're both love's captives; but with fate so cross,
One must be happy by the other's loss. Dryden.

Cross to our interests, curbing sense and sin;
Oppress'd without, and undermin'd within,
It thrives through pain. Dryden.

It runs cross to the belief and apprehension of the rest of mankind; a difficulty which a modest and good man is scarce able to encounter. Atterb.

4. Perverse; untractable.

When through the cross circumstances of a man's temper or condition, the enjoyment of a pleasure would certainly expose him to a greater inconvenience, then religion bids him quit it.
South.

5. Peevish; fretful; ill-humoured.

Did ever any man upon the rack afflict himself, because he had received a cross answer from his mistress? Taylor.

All cross and distasteful humours, and whatever else may render the conversation of men grievous and uneasy to one another, must be shunned.
Tillotson.

6. Contrary; contradictory.

The mind brings all the ends of a long and various hypothesis together; sees how one part coheres with, and depends upon, another; and so clears off all the appearing contrarieties and contradictions, that seemed to lie cross and uncouth, and to make the whole unintelligible. South.

7. Contrary to wish; unfortunate.

We learn the great reasonableness of not only a contented, but also a thankful acquiescence in any condition, and under the crossest and severest passages of Providence. South.

I cannot, without some regret, behold the cross and unlucky issue of my design; for, by my dislike of disputes, I am engaged in one. Glanville.

8. Interchanged.

Evarchus made a cross marriage also with Derilaus's sister, and shortly left her with child of the famous Pyrocles. Sidney.

Cross marriages, between the king's son and the archduke's daughter; and, again, between the archduke's son and the king's daughter.
Bacon's Henry VII.

CROSS. prep.

1. Athwart; so as to intersect any thing; transversely.

The enemy had, in the woods before them, cut down great trees cross the ways, so that their horse could not possibly pass that way. Knolles.

Betwixt the midst and these, the gods assign'd
Two habitable seats of human kind;
And cross their limits cut a sloping way,
Which the twelve signs in beauteous order sway.
Dryden's Virgil.

Cross his back, as in triumphant scorn,
The hope and pillar of the house was born.
Dryden's Fables.

2. Over; from side to side.

A fox was taking a walk one night cross a village. L'Estrange.

To CROSS. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To lay one body, or draw one line, athwart another.

This forc'd the stubborn'st, for the cause,
To cross the cudgels to the laws;
That what by breaking them 't had gain'd,
By their support might be maintain'd. Hudibras.

The loxia, or cross-bill, whose bill is thick and strong, with the tips crossing one another, with great readiness breaks open fir-cones, apples, and other fruit, to come at their kernels; as if the crossing of the bill was designed for this service.
Derham's Physico-Theology.

I shall most carefully observe, not to cross over or deface the copy of your papers for the future, and only to mark in the margin. Pope.

A hunted hare treads back her mazes, and crosses and confounds her former track. Watts.

CROWN. n. s. [couronne, Fr. kroone, Dut. corona, Lat.]

1. The ornament of the head which denotes imperial and regal dignity.

If thou be a king, where is thy crown?——
—My crown is in my heart, not on my head:
My crown is call'd content;
A crown it is that seldom kings enjoy.
Shakesp. Henry VI.

Look down, you gods,
And on this couple drop a blessed crown.
Shakesp. Tempest.

I would the college of the cardinals
Would chuse him pope, and carry him to Rome,
And set the triple crown upon his head.
Shakesp. Henry VI.

Is it not as great a presumption in us to become God's sons; and to inherit kingdoms, and to hope for crowns, and thrones, and sceptres, as it is to sit down with him as his guests? Kettlewell.

2. A garland.

Receive a crown for thy well ordering of the feast. Ecclus.

3. Reward; honorary distinction.

1. A bird which appears in the spring, and is said to suck the eggs of other birds, and lay her own to be hatched in their place: from which practice, it was usual to alarm a husband, at the approach of an adulterer, by calling cuckoo; which, by mistake, was in time applied to the husband. This bird is remarkable for the uniformity of his note, from which his name in most tongues seems to have been formed.

Finding Mopsa, like a cuckoo by a nightingale, alone with Pamela, I came in. Sidney.

The merry cuckoo, messenger of spring,
His trumpet shrill hath thrice already sounded. Spenser.

The plain song cuckoo gray,
Whose note full many a man doth mark,
And dares not answer, nay. Shakesp.

Take heed, have open eye; for thieves do foot by night:
Take heed ere summer comes, or cuckoo birds affright. Shakesp.

I deduce,
From the first note the hollow cuckoo sings,
The symphony of spring; and touch a theme
Unknown to fame; the passion of the grove. Thomson.

2. It is a name of contempt.

Why, what a rascal art thou, then, to praise him so for running!——A-horseback, ye cuckoo; —but a-foot, he will not budge a foot. Shakesp. Henry IV.

Let common yellow sulphur be put into a cucurbite glass, upon which pour the strongest aqua fortis. Mortimer.

CUD. n. s. [cuð, Sax.] That food which is reposited in the first stomach in order to rumination, or to be chewed again.

Many times, when my master's cattle came hither to chew their cud in this fresh place, I might see the young bull testify his love. Sidney.

You range the pathless wood,
While on a flow'ry bank he chews the cud. Dryd.

CU'DDEN. } n. s. [without etymology.] A
CU'DDY. } clown; a stupid rustick; a low dolt: a low bad word.

The slavering cudden, propp'd upon his staff,
Stood ready gaping with a grinning laugh. Dryd.

To CU'DDLE v. n. [a low word, I believe, without etymology.] To lie close; to squat.

Have you mark'd a partridge puake,
Viewing the tow'ring falcon nigh?
She cuddles low behind the brake;
Nor would she stay, nor dares she fly. Prior

CU'DGEL. n. s. [kudse. Dut.]

1. A stick to strike with, lighter than a club, shorter than a pole.

Vine twigs, while they are green, are brittle; yet the wood, dried, is extreme tough; and was used by the captains of armies, amongst the Romans, for their cudgels. Bacon.

Do not provoke the rage of stones
And cudgels to thy hide and bones:
Tremble and vanish. Hudibras.

The ass was quickly given to understand, with a good cudgel, the difference betwixt the one playfellow and the other. L'Estrange.

His surly officer ne'er fail'd to crack
His knotty cudgel on his tougher back. Dryden's Juvenal.

This, if well reflected on, would make people more wary in the use of the rod and the cudgel. Locke.

The wise Cornelius was convinced, that these, being polemical arts, could no more be learned alone than fencing or cudgel-playing. Arbuthnot and Pope.

2. To cross the Cudgels, is to forbear the contest, from the practice of cudgel-players to lay one over the other.

It is much better to give way, than it would be to contend at first, and then either to cross the cudgels, or to be baffled in the conclusion. L'Estrange.

To CU'DGEL. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To beat with a stick.

My lord, he speaks most vilely of you, like a foul-mouthed man as he is; and said he would cudgel you. Shakesp. Henry IV.

The ass courting his master, just as the spaniel had done, instead of being stroked and made much of, is only rated off and cudgelled for all his courtship. South.

Three duels he fought, thrice ventur'd his life;
Went home, and was cudgell'd again by his wife. Swift.

2. To beat in general.

Cudgel thy brains no more about it; for your dull ass will not mend his pace with beating. Shakesp. Hamlet.

A good woman happened to pass by, as a company of young fellows were cudgelling a walnut-tree, and asked them what they did that for. L'Estrange.

CUDGEL-PROOF. adj. Able to resist a stick.

His doublet was of sturdy buff,
And though not sword, yet cudgel-proof. Hudibras.

CU'DLE. n. s. A small sea-fish.

CU'DWEED. n. s. [from cud and weed.] A plant. Miller.

CUE. n. s. [queue, a tail, Fr.]

1. The tail or end of any thing; as, the long curl of a wig.

2. The last words of a speech, which the player, who is to answer, catches, and regards as intimation to begin.

Pyrumus, you begin: when you have spoken your speech, enter into that brake; and so every one according to his cue. Shakesp. Midsummer Night's Dream.

3. A hint; an intimation; a short direction.

What 's Hecuba to him, or he to Hecuba,
That he should weep for her? What would he do,
Had he the motive and the cue for passion
That I have? He would drown the stage with tears. Shakesp.

Let him know how many servants there are, of both sexes, who expect vails; and give them their cue to attend in two lines, as he leaves the house. Swift.

4. The part which any man is to play in his turn.

Hold your hands,
Both you of my inclining, and the rest:
Were it my cue to fight, I should have known it
Without a prompter. Shakesp. Othello.

Neither is Otto here a much more taking gentleman: nothing appears in his cue to move pity, or any way make the audience of his party. Rymer's Tragedies of the last Age.

5. Humour: temper of mind: a low word.

CUERPO. n. s. [Span.] To be in cuerpo, is to be without the upper coat or cloke, so as to discover the true shape of the cuerpo or body.

Exposed in cuerpo to their rage,
Without my arms and equipage. Hudibras.

CUFF. n. s. [zuffa, a battle; zuffare to fight, Ital.]

1. A blow with the fist; a box; a stroke.

The priest let fall the book,
And as he stoop'd again to take it up,
The mad-brain'd bridegroom took him such a cuff,
That down fell priest and book, and book and priest. Shakesp.

There was no money bid for argument, unless the poet and the player went to cuffs in the question. Shakesp.

He gave her a cuff on the ear, and she would prick him with her knitting-needle. Arbuthnot's John Bull.

Their own sects, which now lie dormant, would be soon at cuffs again with each other about power and preferment. Swift.

2. It is used of birds that fight with their talons.

To CUFF. v. n. [from the noun.] To fight; to scuffle.

Clapping farces acted by the court,
While the peers cuff to make the rabble sport. Dryden's Juvenal.

To CUFF. v. a.

1. To strike with the fist.

I'll after him again, and beat him.——
——Do, cuff him soundly; but never draw thy sword. Shakesp.

Were not you, my friend, abused, and cuffed, and kicked? Congreve's Old Bachelor.

2. To strike with the talons.

Those lazy owls, who perch'd near fortune's top,
Sit only watchful with their heavy wings
To cuff down new-fledg'd virtues, that would rise
To nobler heights, and make the grove harmonious. Otway.

The dastard crow, that to the wood made wing,
With her loud kaws her craven kind does bring,
Who, safe in numbers, cuff the noble bird. Dryd.

They with their quills did all the hurt they cou'd,
And cuff'd the tender chickens from their food. Dryden.

3. To strike with the wings. This seems improper.

Hov'ring about the coasts, they make their moan,
And cuff the cliffs with pinions not their own. Dryden's Æneid.

CUFF. n. s. [coeffe, Fr.] Part of the sleeve.

He railed at fops; and, instead of the common fashion, he would visit his mistress in a morning gown band, short cuffs, and a peaked beard. Arbuthnot.

CUI'NAGE. n. s. The making up of twine into such forms, as is commonly framed into for carriage to other places. Cowell.

CUIRASS. n. s. [cuirasse, Fr. from cuir leather; coraccia, Ital.] A breastplate.

The lance pursued the voice without delay,
And pierc'd his cuirass, with such fury sent,
And sign'd his bosom with a purple tint. Dryd.

CUIRA'SSIER. n. s. [from cuirass.] A man at arms; a soldier in armour.

The field, all iron, cast a gleaming brown,
Nor wanted clouds of foot, nor on each horn
Cuirassiers, all in steel, for standing fight. Milton.

The picture of St. George, wherein he is described like a cuirassier, or horseman completely armed, is rather a symbolical image than any proper figure. Brown's Vulg. Err.

CUISH. n. s. [cuisse, Fr.] The armour that covers the thighs.

I saw young Harry, with his beaver on,
His cuishes on his thighs, gallantly arm'd,
Rise from the ground like feather'd Mercury. Shakesp. Henry IV.

The croslet some, and some the cuishes mould,
With silver plated, and with ductile gold. Dryden's Æneid.

But what had our author to wound Æneas with at so critical a time? And how came the cuishes to be worse tempered than the rest of his armour? Dryden.

CU'LDEES. n. s. [colidei, Lat.] Monks in Scotland.

CU'LERAGE. n. s. The same plant with ARSE-SMART. Ainsworth.

CU'LINARY. adj. [culina, Lat.] Relating to the kitchen; relating to the art of cookery.

Great weight may condense those vapours and exhalations, as soon as they shall at any time begin to ascend from the sun, and make them presently fall back again into him, and by that action increase his heat; much after the manner that, in our earth, the air increases the heat of a culinary fire Newton.

To those who, by reason of their northern exposition, will be still forced to be at the expence of culinary fires, it will reduce the price of their manufacture. Arbuthnot.

To CULL. v. a. [cueillir, Fr.] To select from others; to pick out of many.

The best of every thing they had being culled out for themselves, if there were in their flocks any poor diseased thing not worth the keeping, they thought it good enough for the altar of God. Hooker.

Our engines shall be bent
Against the brows of this resisting town:
Call for our chiefest men of discipline,
To cull the plots of best advantage. Shakesp. King John.

Like the bee, culling from ev'ry flow'r,
Our thighs are packt with wax, our mouths with honey. Shakesp.

I do remember an apothecary
In tatter'd weeds, with overwhelming brows,
Culling of simples. Shakesp. Romeo and Juliet.

Then in a moment fortune shall cull forth,
Out of one side, her happy minion. Shakesp. King John.

The choicest of the British, the Roman, Saxon, and Norman laws, being culled, as it were, this grand charter was extracted. Howel's Parley of Beasts.

When false flow'rs of rhetorick thou would'st cull,
Trust nature, do not labour to be dull. Dryden.

From his herd he culls,
For slaughter, four the fairest of his bulls. Dryden's Virgil.

When the current pieces of the same denomination are of different weights, then the traders in money cull out the heavier, and melt them down with profit. Locke

With humble duty and officious haste,
I'll cull the farthest mead for thy repast. Prior.

The various off'rings of the world appear:
From each she nicely culls with curious toil,
And decks the goddess with the glitt'ring spoil. Pope.

CU'LLER. n. s. [from cull.] One who picks or chooses.

CU'LLION. n. s. [from coglione a fool, Ital. or perhaps from scullion. It seems to import meanness rather than folly.] A scoundrel; a mean wretch.

Such a one as leaves a gentleman,
And makes a god of such a cullion. Shakesp. Taming of the Shrew.

Up to the breach, you dogs; avaunt you cullions. Shakesp.

CU'LLIONLY. adj. [from cullion.] Having the qualities of a cullion; mean; base.

I'll make a sop o' th' moonshine of you: you whoreson, cullionly, barber-monger draw. Shakesp. King Lear.

CU'LLUMBINE. n. s. [more properly spelt COLUMBINE.] The flowers of this plant are beautifully variegated with blue, purple, red, and white. Miller.

Her goodly bosom, like a strawberry bed;
Her neck, like to a bunch of cullumbines. Spenser.

CU'LLY. n. s. [coglione, Ital. a fool.] A man deceived or imposed upon; as by sharpers, or a strumpet.

Why should you, whose mother-wits
Are furnish'd with all perquisites,
B' allow'd to put all tricks upon
Our cully sex, and we use none? Hudibras.

Yet the rich cullies may their boasting spare:
They purchase but sophisticated ware. Dryden.

He takes it in mighty dudgeon, because I won't let him make me over by deed as his [illegible] cully. Arbuthnot.

To CU'LLY. v. a. [from the noun.] To befool; to cheat; to trick; to deceive; to impose upon.

CULMI'FEROUS. adj. [culmus, and fero, Lat.]

Culmiferous plants are such as have a smooth jointed stalk, and usually hollow; and at each joint the stalk is wrapped about with single, narrow, long, sharp-pointed leaves, and their seeds are contained in chaffy husks. Quincy

There are also several sorts of grasses, both of the Cyprus and culmiferous kinds; some with broader, others with narrower leaves.
Woodward on Fossils.

The properest food of the vegetable kingdom is taken from the farinaceous or mealy seeds of some culmiferous plants; as oats, barley, wheat, rice, rye, maize, panic, millet. Arbuthnot.

To CU'LMINATE. v. n. [culmen, Lat.] To be vertical; to be in the meridian.

Far and wide his eye commands:
For sight no obstacle found here, or shade,
But all sunshine; as when his beams at noon
Culminate from th' equator. Milton's Par. Lost.

CULMINA'TION. n. s. [from culminate.] The transit of a planet through the meridian.

CULPABI'LITY. n. s. [from culpable.] Blameableness.

CU'LPABLE. adj. [culpabilis, Lat.]

1. Criminal.

Proceed no straiter 'gainst our uncle Glo'ster,
Than from true evidence of good esteem
He be approv'd in practice culpable. Shak. H. VI.

2. Guilty; with of.

These being perhaps culpable of this crime, or favourers of their friends. Spenser's State of Irel.

3. Blameable; blameworthy.

The wisdom of God setteth before us in Scripture so many admirable patterns of virtue, and no one of them without somewhat noted wherein they were culpable; to the end that to Him alone it might always be acknowledged, Thou only art holy, Thou only art just. Hooker.

All such ignorance is voluntary, and therefore culpable; forasmuch as it was in every man's power to have prevented it. South.

CU'LPABLENESS. n. s. [from culpable.] Blame; guilt.

CU'LPABLY. adv. [from culpable.] Blameably; criminally.

If we perform this duty pitifully and culpably, it is not to be expected we should communicate holily. Taylor.

CU'LPRIT. n. s. [about this word there is great dispute. It is used by the judge at criminal trials, who, when the prisoner declares himself not guilty, and put himself upon his trial, answers Culprit, God send thee a good deliverance. It is likely that it is a corruption of Qu'il paroît, May it so appear; the wish of the judge being that the prisoner may be found innocent.] A man arraigned before his judge.

The knight appear'd, and silence they proclaim;
Then first the culprit answer'd to his name;
And, after forms of law, was last requir'd
To name the thing that woman most desir'd. Dry.

An author is in the condition of a culprit; the publick are his judges: by allowing too much, and condescending too far, he may injure his own cause; and by pleading and asserting too boldly, he may displease the court. Prior's Pref. to Solomon.

CU'LTER. n. s. [culter, Lat.] The iron of the plough perpendicular to the share. It is commonly written coulter.

Her fallow lees
The darnel, hemlock, and rank fumitory,
Doth root upon; while that the culter rusts
That should deracinate such savagery.
Shakesp. Henry V.

To CU'LTIVATE. v. a. [cultiver, Fr.]

1. To forward or improve the product of the earth by natural industry.

Those excellent seeds implanted in your birth, will, if cultivated, be most flourishing in production; and, as the soil is good, and no cost nor care wanting to improve it, we must entertain hopes of the richest harvest. Felton on the Classicks.

2. To improve; to meliorate.

Were we but less indulgent to our faults,
And patience had to cultivate our thoughts,
Our muse would flourish. Waller.

To make man mild and sociable to man,
To cultivate the wild licentious savage
With wisdom, discipline, and liberal arts,
Th' embellishments of life. Addison's Cato.

CULTIVA'TION. n. s. [from cultivate.]

1. The art or practice of improving soils, and forwarding or meliorating vegetables.

2. Improvement in general; promotion; melioration.

An innate light discovers the common notions of good and evil, which, by cultivation and improvement, may be advanced to higher and brighter discoveries. South.

A foundation of good sense, and a cultivation of learning, are required to give a seasoning to retirement, and make us taste the blessing. Dryden.

CULTIVA'TOR. n. s. [from cultivate.] One who improves, promotes, or meliorates; or endeavours to forward any vegetable product, or any thing else capable of improvement.

It has been lately complained of, by some cultivators of clover grass, that from a great quantity of the seed not any grass springs up. Boyle.

CU'LTURE. n. s. [cultura, Lat.]

1. The act of cultivation; the act of tilling the ground; tillage.

Give us seed unto our heart, and culture to our understanding, that there may come fruit of it.
2 Esdras, viii. 6.

These three last were slower than the ordinary wheat of itself, and this culture did rather retard than advance. Bacon.

The plough was not invented till after the deluge; the earth requiring little or no care or culture, but yielding its increase freely, and without labour and toil. Woodward.

Where grows?—Where grows it not? If vain our toil,
We ought to blame the culture, not the soil,
Fix'd to no spot is happiness sincere. Pope.

They rose as vigorous as the sun;
Then to the culture of the willing glebe. Thomson.

2. Art of improvement and melioration.

One might wear any passion out of a family by culture, as skilful gardeners blot a colour out of a tulip that hurts its beauty. Tatler.

To CU'LTURE. v. a. [from the noun.] To cultivate; to manure; to till. It is used by Thomson, but without authority.

CU'LVER. n. s. [columba, Lat. culfne, Sax.] A pigeon. An old word.

Had he so done, he had him snatch'd away,
More light than culver in the faulcon's fist. Spens.

Whence borne on liquid wing,
The sounding culver shoots. Thomson's Spring.

CU'LVERIN. n. s. [colouvrine, Fr.] A species of ordnance: originally a hawk.

A whole cannon requires, for every charge, forty pounds of powder, and a bullet of sixty-four pounds; a culverin, sixteen pounds of powder, and a bullet of nineteen pounds; a demi-culverin, nine pounds of powder, and a bullet of twelve pounds. Wilkin's Math. Magic.

Here a well polish'd mall gives us the joy
To see our prince his matchless force employ:
No sooner has he touch'd the flying ball,
But 'tis already more than half the mall;
And such a fury from his arm 't has got,
As from a smoaking culverin 'twere shot. Waller.

CU'LVERKEY. n. s. A flower.

Looking down the meadows I could see a girl cropping culverkeys and cowslips, to make garlands. Walton's Angler.

To CU'MBER. v. a. [kommeren, kombren to disturb, Dut.]

1. To embarrass; to entangle; to obstruct.

Why asks he what avails him not in fight,
And would but cumber and retard his flight,
In which his only excellence is plac'd?
You give him death that intercept his haste.
Dryden's Fables.

Hardly his head the plunging pilot rears,

The learning and mastery of a tongue, being uneasy and unpleasant enough in itself, should not be cumbered with any other difficulties, as is done in this way of proceeding. Locke.

2. To crowd or load with something useless.

Let it not cumber your better remembrance.
Shakesp. Timon.

The multiplying variety of argument*, especially frivolous ones, is not only lost labour, but cumbers the memory to no purpose. Locke.

3. To involve in difficulties and dangers; to distress.

Domestick fury, and fierce civil strife,
Shall cumber all the parts of Italy.
Shakesp. Julius Cæsar.

4. To busy; to distract with multiplicity of cares.

Martha was cumbered about much serving. Luke.

5. To be troublesome in any place.

Doth the bramble cumber a garden? It makes the better hedge; where, if it chances to prick the owner, it will tear the thief.
Grew's Cosmologia.

CU'MBER. n. s. [komber, Dut.] Vexation; burdensomeness; embarrassment; obstruction; hindrance; disturbance; distress.

By the occasion thereof I was brought to as great cumber and danger, as lightly any might escape. Sidney.

Thus fade thy helps, and thus thy cumbers spring. Spenser.

The greatest ships are least serviceable, go very deep in water, are of marvellous charge and fearful cumber. Raleigh.

CU'MBERSOME. adj. [from cumber.]

1. Troublesome; vexatious.

Thinking it too early, as long as they had any day, to break off so pleasing a company, with going to perform a cumbersome obedience. Sidney.

2. Burdensome; embarrassing.

I was drawn in to write the first part by accident, and to write the second by some defects in the first: these are the cumbersome perquisites of authors. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

3. Unwieldy; unmanageable.

Very long tubes are cumbersome, and scarce to be readily managed. Newton's Opticks.

CU'MBERSOMELY. adv. [from cumbersome.] In a troublesome manner; in a manner that produces hindrance and vexation.

CU'MBERSOMENESS. n. s. [from cumbersome.] Encumbrance; hindrance; obstruction.

CU'MBRANCE. n. s. [from cumber.] Burden; hindrance; impediment.

Extol not riches then, the toil of fools,
The wise man's cumbrance, if not snare; more apt
To slacken virtue, and abate her edge,
Than prompt her to do aught may merit praise.
Milton.

CU'MBROUS. adj. [from cumber.]

1. Troublesome; vexatious; disturbing.

A cloud of cumbrous gnats do him molest,
All striving to infix their feeble stings,
That from their noyance he no where can rest.
Spenser

2. Oppressive; burdensome.

Henceforth I fly not death, nor would prolong
Life much! Bent rather, how I may be quit,
Fairest and easiest, of this cumbrous charge. Milt.
They rear'd him from the ground,
And from his cumbrous arms his limbs unbound;
Then lanc'd a vein. Dryden.
Possession's load was grown so great,
He sunk beneath the cumbrous weight. Swift.

3. Jumbled; obstructing each other.

Swift to their several quarters hasted then
The cumbrous elements, earth flood, air, fire. Milt.

CU'NNING. adj. [from connan, Sax. konnen, Dut. to know.]

1. Skilful; knowing; well instructed; learned.

Schoolmasters will I keep within my house,
Fit to instruct her youth.—To cunning men
I will be very kind; and liberal
To mine own children, in good bringing up. Shak.
I do present you with a man of mine,
Cunning in musick and the mathematicks,
To instruct her fully in those sciences. Shakesp.

Wherein is he good, but to taste sack and drink it? Wherein cunning, but in craft? Wherein crafty, but in villainy? Shakesp. Henry IV.

Send me now therefore a man cunning to work in gold and in silver, and that can skill to cut and to grave. 2 Chronicles.

When Pedro does the lute command,
She guides the cunning artist's hand. Prior.

2. Performed with skill; artful.

And over them Arachne high did lift
Her cunning web, and spread her subtile net,
Enwrapped in foul smoak, and clouds more black than jet. Spenser.

And there beside of marble stone was built
An altar, carv'd with cunning imagery;
On which true Christians blood was often spilt,
And holy martyrs often done to die. Spenser.

Once put out thy light,
Thou cunning'st pattern of excelling nature,
I know not where is that Promethean heat,
That can thy light relumine. Shakesp. Othello.

3. Artfully deceitful; sly; designing; trickish; full of fetches and stratagems; subtle; crafty; subdolous.

These small wares and petty points of cunning are infinite, and it were a good deed to make a list of them; for nothing doth more hurt than that cunning men pass for wise. Bacon.

Men will leave truth and misery to such as love it; they are resolved to be cunning: let others run the hazard of being sincere. South.

4. Acted with subtilty.

The more he protested, the more his father thought he dissembled, accounting his integrity to be but a cunning face of falsehood. Sidney.

CU'NNING. n. s. [cunninge, Sax.]

1. Artifice; deceit; sliness; sleight; craft; subtilty; dissimulation; fraudulent dexterity.

What if I be not so much the poet, as even that miserable subject of his cunning, whereof you speak? Sidney.

We take cunning for a sinister or crooked wisdom; and certainly there is a great difference between a cunning man and a wise man, not only in point of honesty, but in point of ability. Bacon.

Discourage cunning in a child; cunning is the ape of wisdom. Locke.

2. Art; skill; knowledge; right-hand cunning.

CU'NNINGLY. adv. [from cunning.] Artfully; slily; subtilely; by fraudulent contrivance; craftily.

Amongst other crimes of this nature, there was diligent enquiry made of such as had raised and dispersed a bruit and rumour, a little before the field fought, that the rebels had the day, and that the king's army was overthrown, and the king fled; whereby it was supposed, that many succours were cunningly put off and kept back. Bacon's Henry VII.

I must meet my danger, and destroy him first;
But cunningly and closely. Denham's Sophy.

When stock is high, they come between,
Making by second-hand their offers;
Then cunningly retire unseen,
With each a million in his coffers. Swift.

CU'NNINGMAN. n. s. [cunning and man.] A man who pretends to tell fortunes, or teach how to recover stolen goods.

He sent him for a strong detachment
Of beadle, constable, and watchmen,
T' attack the cunningman for plunder
Committed falsely on his lumber. Hudibras

CU'NNINGNESS. n. s. [from cunning.] Deceitfulness; sliness.

CUP. n. s. [cup, Sax. kop, Dut. coupe, Fr.]

1. A small vessel to drink in.

Thou shalt deliver Pharaoh's cup into his hand, after the former manner when thou wast his butler. Genesis.

Ye heav'nly pow'rs, that guard
The British isles, such dire events remove
Far from fair Albion; nor let civil broils
Ferment from social cups. Philips.

2. The liquor contained in the cup: the draught.

Which when the vile enchantress perceiv'd,
With cup thus charm'd imparting she deceiv'd. Spenser.

All friends shall taste
The wages of their virtue and all foes
The cups of their deservings. Shakesp. King Lear.

Will't please your lordship, drink a cup of sack? Shakesp.

They that never had the use
Of the grape's surprising juice,
To the first delicious cup
All their reason render up. Waller.

The best, the dearest fav'rite of the sky
Must taste that cup; for man is born to die. Pope's Odyssey.

3. [In the plural.] Social entertainment; merry bout.

Then shall our names,
Familiar in their mouth as household words,
Be in their flowing cups freshly remember'd. Shakesp. Henry V.

Let us suppose that I were reasoning, as one friend with another, by the fireside, or in our cups, without care, without any great affection to either party. Knolles.

It was near a miracle to see an old man silent, since talking is the disease of age; but, amongst cups, makes fully a wonder. Ben Jonson's Discov.

Thence from cups to civil broils! Milton.

Amidst his cups with fainting shiv'ring seiz'd,
His limbs disjointed, and all o'er diseas'd,
His hand refuses to sustain the bowl. Dryden's Persius.

4. Any thing hollow like a cup: as, the husk of an acorn: the bell of a flower.

A pyrites of the same colour and shape placed in the cavity of another of an hemispherick figure, in much the same manner as an acorn in its cup. Woodward on Fossils.

5. Cup and Can. Familiar companions. The can is the large vessel out of which the cup is filled, and to which it is a constant associate.

You boasting tell us where you din'd,
And how his lordship was so kind;
Swear he 's a most facetious man;
That you and he are cup and can:
You travel with a heavy load,
And quite mistake preferment's road. Swift.

6. [couper, Fr. to scarify.] A glass to draw the blood in scarification.

Hippocrates tells you, that in applying of cups, the scarification ought to be made with crooked instruments. Arbuthnot.

To CUP. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To supply with cups. This sense is obsolete.

Plumpy Bacchus, with pink eyne,
In thy vats our cares be drown'd;
With thy grapes our hairs be crown'd!
Cup us, till the world go round. Shakesp. Ant. and Cleopatra.

2. [couper, to cut, Fr.] To fix a glass bell or cucurbite upon the skin, to draw the blood in scarification.

The clotted blood lies heavy upon his heart,
Corrupts, and there remains in spite of art;
Nor breathing veins nor cupping will prevail;
All outward remedies and inward fail. Dryden's Fables.

You have quartered all the foul language upon me, that could be raked out of the air of Billingsgate, without knowing who I am, or whether I deserve to be cupped and scarified at this rate. Spectator.

Blistering, cupping, and bleeding, are seldom of use but to the idle and intemperate. Addison's Spectator.

Him the damn'd doctors and his friends immur'd;
They bled, they cupp'd, they purg'd; in short they cur'd. Pope.

CUPBE'ARER. n. s.

1. An officer of the king's household.

There is conveyed to Mr. Villiers an intimation of the king's pleasure to wait and to be sworn his servant, and shortly after his cupbearer at large; and the summer following he was admitted in ordinary. Wotton.

2. An attendant to give wine at a feast.

This vine was said to be given to Tros, the father of Priam, by Jupiter, as a recompence for his carrying away his son Ganymede to be his cupbearer. Broome.

CU'PBOARD. n. s. [cup and bord, a case or receptacle, Sax.] A case with shelves, in which victuals or earthen ware is placed.

Some trees are best for planchers, as deal; some for tables, cupboards, and desks, as walnut. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

Codrus had but one bed; so short, to boot,
That his short wife's short legs hung dangling out:
His cupboard's head six earthern pitchers grac'd,
Beneath them was his trusty tankard plac'd. Dryden's Juvenal.

Yet their wine and their victuals these curmudgeon-lubbards
Lock up from my sight, in cellars and cupboards. Swift.

To* CU'PBOARD. v. a. [from the noun.] To treasure in a cupboard; to hoard up.

The belly did remain
I' th' midst o' the body, idle and unactive,
Still cupboarding the viand, never bearing
Like labour with the rest. Shakesp. Coriolanus.

CUPI'DITY. n. s. [cupiditas, Lat.] Concupiscence; unlawful or unreasonable longing.

CU'POLA. n. s. [Italian.] A dome; the hemispherical summit of a building.

Nature seems to have designed the head as the cupola to the most glorious of her works; and when we load it with supernumerary ornaments, we destroy the symmetry of the human figure. Addison's Spectator.

CU'PPEL. n. s. See COPPEL.

There be other bodies fixed, as we see in the stuff whereof cuppels are made, which they put into furnaces, upon which fire worketh not. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

CU'PPER. n. s. [from cup.] One who applies cupping-glasses; a scarifier.

CUPPING-GLASS. n. s. [from cup and glass.] A glass used by scarifiers to draw out the blood by rarefying the air.

A bubo, in this case, ought to be drawn outward by cupping-glasses, and brought to suppuration. Wiseman.

CU'PREOUS. adj. [cupreus, Lat.] Coppery; consisting of copper.

Having by the intervention of a little sal armoniack, made copper inflammable, I took some small grains, and put them under the wick of a burning candle; whereby they were with the melted tallow so kindled, that the green, not blue, flame of the cupreus body did burn. Boyle.

CUR. n. s. [korre, Dut. See CURTAL.]

1. A worthless degenerate dog.

'Tis a good dog.
—A cur, Sir.——
—Sir, he 's a good dog, and a fair dog. Shakesp.

Here's an old drudging cur turned off to shift for himself, for want of the very teeth and heels that he had lost in his master's service. L'Estrange

A cur may bear
The name of tiger, lion, or whate'er
Denotes the noblest or the fairest beast.
Dryden's Juvenal.

2. A term of reproach for a man.

What would ye have, ye curs,
That like not peace nor war? Shakesp. Coriolanus.

This knight had occasion to inquire the way to St. Anne's Lane; the person, whom he spoke to, called him a young popish cur, and asked him, who made Anne a saint? Addison.

CU'RABLE. adj. [from cure.] That admits a remedy; that may be healed.

A consumption of the lungs, at the beginning, herein differs from all other curable diseases, that it is not to be worn away by change of diet, or a cheerful spirit. Harvey.

A desperate wound must skilful hands employ,
But thine is curable by Philip's boy. Dryd. Juv.

CU'RABLENESS. n. s. [from curable.] Possibility to be healed.

CU'RACY. n. s. [from curate.] Employment of a curate, distinct from a benefice; employment which a hired clergyman holds under the beneficiary.

They get into orders as soon as they can, and, if they be very fortunate, arrive in time to a curacy here in town. Swift.

CU'RATE. n. s. [curator, Lat.]

1. A clergyman hired to perform the duties of another.

He spar'd no pains; for curate he had none,
Nor durst he trust another with his care. Dryden's Fables.

2. A parish priest.

Bishops and curates, and all congregations. Common Prayer.

I thought the English of curate had been an ecclesiastical hireling.——No such matter; the proper import of the word signifies one who has the cure of souls. Collier on Pride.

CU'RATESHIP. n. s. [from curate.] The same with curacy.

CU'RATIVE. adj. [from cure.] Relating to the cure of diseases; not preservative.

The theraputick or curative physick, we term that which restores the patient unto sanity. Brown's Vulg. Err.

A minor cannot appear as a defendant in court, but by his guardian and curator. Ayliffe's Parergon.

CURB. n. s. [courber, to bend, Fr.]

1. A curb is an iron chain, made fast to the upper part of the branches of the bridle, in a hole called the eye, and running over the beard of the horse. Farrier's Dict

The ox hath his bow, the horse his curb, and the falcon his bells; so man hath his desires. Shakesp. As you like it.

So four fierce coursers, starting to the race,
Scour through the plain, and lengthen ev'ry pace;
Nor reins, nor curbs, nor threat'ning cries they fear. Dryden.

2. Restraint; inhibition; opposition; hindrance.

The Roman state, whose course will on
The way it takes, cracking ten thousand curbs
Of more strong links asunder, than can ever
Appear in your impediment. Shak Coriolanus.

We remain
In strictest bondage, though thus far remov'd,
Under th' inevitable curb, reserv'd
His captive multitude. Milton's Par. Lost.

By these men, religion, that should be
The curb, is made the spur to tyranny. Denham's Sophy.

Even they, who think us under no other tie to the true interest of our country, will allow this to be an effectual curb upon us. Atterbury.

3. A curb is a hard and callous tumour, which runs along the inside of a horse's hoof; that is, on that part of the hoof that is opposite to the leg of the lame side. Far. Dict.

To* CURB. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To guide or restrain a horse with a curb.

Part wield their arms, part curb the foaming steed. Milton.

2. To restrain; to inhibit; to check; to confine; to hold back.

Were not the laws planted amongst them at the first, and had they not governors to curb and keep them still in awe and obedience. Spenser on Irel.

Then thou, the mother of so sweet a child,
Her false imagin'd loss cease to lament,
And wisely learn to curb thy sorrows wild. Milt.

If sense and learning are such unsociable imperious things, he ought to keep down the growth of his reason, and curb his intellectuals. Collier on Pride.

Knowing when a muse should be indulged
In her full flight, and when she should be curbed. Roscommon.

At this she curb'd a groan, that else had come;
And, pausing, view'd the present in the tomb. Dryden's Fables.

Till force returns, his ardour we restrain.
And curb his warlike wish to cross the main. Dryd.

Some poor cottage on the mountain's brow,
Where pinching want must curb thy warm desires,
And household cares suppress thy genial fires. Prior.

Nature to all things fix'd the limits fit,
And wisely curb'd proud man's pretending wit. Pope.

3. Sometimes with from.

Yet you are curb'd from that enlargement by
The consequence of the crown. Shakesp. Cymb.

4. In the following passage it signifies, I think, as in French, to bend.

Though the course of the sun be curbed between the tropics, yet are not those parts directly subject to his perpendicular beams unhabitable or extremely hot. Ray.

CURD. n. s. [See CRUDLE.] The coagulation of milk; the concretion of the thicker parts of any liquor.

Milk of itself is such a compound of cream, curds, and whey, as it is easily turned and dissolved. Bacon.

This night, at least, with me forget your care;
Chesnuts, and curds and cream, shall be your fare. Dryden.

Let Sporus tremble.—What! that thing of silk?
Sporus, that mere white curd of ass's milk? Pope.

To* CURD. v. a. [from the noun.] To turn to curds; to cause to coagulate.

Maiden, does it curd thy blood,
To say I am thy mother? Shakesp. All's well that ends well.

To* CUR'DLE. v. n. [from curd.] To coagulate; to shoot together; to concrete.

Powder of mint, and powder of red roses, keep the milk somewhat from turning or curdling in the stomach. Bacon.

Some to the house,
The fold, and dairy, hungry bend their flight,
Sip round the pail, or taste the curdling cheese. Thomson's Summer.

To* CURDLE. v. a. To cause to coagulate; to force into concretions.

His changed powers at first themselves not felt,
Till curdled cold his courage 'gan t' assail. Spenser.

Mixed with the sixth part of a spoonful of milk, it burnt to the space of one hundred pulses, and the milk was curdled. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

My soul is all the same,
Unmov'd with fear, and mov'd with martial fame,
But my chill blood is curdled in my veins,
And scarce the shadow of a man remains.
Dryden's Virgil.

Ev'n now a fatal draught works out my soul;
Ev'n now it curdles in my shrinking veins
The lazy blood, and freezes at my heart. Smith.
There is in the spirit of wine some acidity, by which brandy curdles milk. Floyer.

CU'RDY. adj. [from curd.] Coagulated; concreted; full of curds; curdled.

It differs from a vegetable emulsion, by coagulating into a curdy mass with acids. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

CURE. n. s. [cura, Lat.]

1. Remedy; restorative.

This league that we have made
Will give her sadness very little cure;
Brother of England how may we content
This widow lady? Shakesp. King John.
Cold, hunger, prisons, ills without a cure,
All these he must, and guiltless oft, endure.
Dryden's Fables.
Now we're ador'd, and the next hour displease;
At first your cure, and after your disease. Granv.
Horace advises the Romans to seek a seat in some remote part, by way of a cure for the corruption of manners. Swift.

2. Act of healing.

I do cures to-day and to-morrow. Luke, xiii. 32.

3. The benefice or employment of a curate or clergyman.

If his cure lies among the lawyers, let nothing be said against entangling property, spinning out causes, squeezing clients, and making the laws a greater grievance than those who break them. Collier.

To* CURE. v. a. [curo, Lat.]

1. To heal; to restore to health; to remedy; to recover: with of before the disease. Used of patients or diseases.

The bones, in sharp colds, wax brittle; and therefore all contusions of bones, in hard weather, are more difficult to cure. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
Here the poor lover, that has long endur'd
Some proud nymph's scorn, of his fond passion's cur'd. Waller.
I never knew any man cured of inattention. Swift.
Hear what from love unpractis'd hearts endure,
From love, the sole disease thou canst not cure. Pope.

2. To prepare in any manner, so as to be preserved from corruption.

The beef would be so ill chosen, or so ill cured, as to stink many times before it came so far as Holland. Temple.

CU'RELESS. adj. [cure and less.] Without cure; without remedy.

Bootless are plaints, and cureless are my wounds;
No way to fly, nor strength to hold out flight.
Shakesp. Henry VI.
Repair thy wit, good youth, or it will fall
To cureless ruin. Shakesp Merchant of Venice.
If, said he,
Your grief alone is hard captivity,
For love of heav'n, with patience undergo
A cureless ill, since fate will have it so. Dryd. Fab.

CU'RER. n. s. [from cure.] A healer; a physician.

He is a curer of souls, and you a curer of bodies: if you should fight, you go against the hair of your professions. Shakesp.
The indexterity and worst success of the most famous of our consumption curers, do evidently demonstrate their dimness in beholding its causes. Harvey on Consumptions.

CU'RFEW. n. s. [couvre feu, Fr.]

1. An evening-peal, by which the Conqueror willed that every man should rake up his fire, and put out his light; so that in places, at this day, where a bell is customarily run towards bed-time, it is said to ring curfew. Cowell.

You, whose pastime
Is to make midnight mushrooms, that rejoice
To hear the solemn curfew. Shakesp. Tempest.
Oft on a plat of rising ground
I hear the far off curfew sound,
Over some wide-water'd shore,
Swinging slow with sullen roar. Milton.

2. A cover for a fire; a fireplate.

But now for pans, pots, curfews, counters, and the like, the beauty will not be so much respected, so as the compound stuff is like to pass. Bacon.

CURIA'LITY. n. s. [from curialis, Lat.] The privileges, prerogatives, or perhaps retinue, of a court.

The court and curiality. Bacon to Villiers.

CURIO'SITY. n. s. [from curious.]

1. Inquisitiveness; inclination to enquiry.

2. Nicety; delicacy.

When thou wast in thy guilt, and thy perfume, they mocked thee for too much curiosity; in thy rags thou knowest none, but art despised for the contrary. Shakesp. Timon.

3. Accuracy; exactness.

Qualities are so weighed, that curiosity in neither can make choice of either's moiety. Shak. King Lear.
Our senses, however armed or assisted, are too gross to discern the curiosity of the workmanship of nature. Ray.

4. An act of curiosity; nice experiment.

There hath been practised also a curiosity, to set a tree upon the north side of a wall, and at a little height, to draw it through the wall, and spread it upon the south side, conceiving that the root and lower part of the stock should enjoy the freshness of the shade, and the upper boughs and fruit, the comfort of the sun; but it sorted not. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

5. An object of curiosity; rarity.

We took a ramble together to see the curiosities of this great town. Addison's Freeholder.

CU'RIOUS. adj. [curiosus, Lat.]

1. Inquisitive; desirous of information; addicted to enquiry.

Be not curious in unnecessary matters; for more things are shewn unto thee than men understand. Ecclus. iii. 23.
Even then to them the spirit of lyes suggests
That they were blind, because they saw not ill;
And breath'd into their uncorrupted breasts
A curious wish, which did corrupt their will.
Davies.
If any one too curious should enquire
After a victory which we disdain
Then let him know the Belgians did retire
Before the patron saint of injur'd Spain. Dryden.
Reader if any curious stay
To ask my hated name,
Tell them, the grave that hides my clay
Conceals me from my shame. Wesley.

2. Attentive to; diligent about: sometimes with after.

It is pity a gentleman so very curious after things that were elegant and beautiful, should not have been as curious as to their origin, their uses, and their natural history. Woodward.

3. Sometimes with of.

Then thus a senior of the place replies,
Well read, and curious of antiquities. Dryd. Fab.

4. Accurate; careful not to mistake.

Till Arianism had made it a matter of great sharpness and subtlety of wit to be a sound believing Christian, men were not curious what syllables or particles of speech they used. Hooker.

5. Difficult to please; solicitous of perfection; not negligent; full of care.

A temperate person is not curious of fancies and deliciousness; he thinks not much and speaks not often, of meat and drink. Taylor.

6. Exact; nice; subtle.

Both these senses embrace their objects at greater distance, with more variety, and with a more curious discrimination, than the other sense. Holder.

7. Artful; not neglectful; not fortuitous.

A vaile obscur'd the sunshine of her eyes,
The rose within herself her sweetness clos'd;
Each ornament about her seemly lies,
By curious chance, or careless art, compos'd.
Fairfax

8. Elegant; neat; laboured; finished.

Understanding to devise curious works to work in gold. Exodus.

9. Rigid; severe; rigorous.

For curious I cannot be with you,
Signior Baptista, of whom I hear so well.
Shakesp.

CU'RIOUSLY. adv. [from curious.]

1. Inquisitively; attentively; studiously.

He looked very curiously upon himself, sometimes fetching a little skip, as if he said his strength had not yet forsaken him. Sidney.
At first I thought there had been no light reflected from the water in that place; but observing it more curiously, I saw within it several smaller round spots, which appeared much blacker and darker than the rest. Newton's Opticks.

2. Elegantly; neatly.

Nor is it the having of wheels and springs, tho' never so curiously wrought, and artificially set, but the winding of them up, that must give motion to the watch. South

3. Artfully; exactly.

4. Captiously.

CURL. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. A ringlet of hair.

She apparelled herself like a page, cutting off her hair, leaving nothing but the short curls to cover that noble head. Sidney.
Just as in act he stood, in clouds enshrin'd,
Her hand she fasten'd on his hair behind,
Then backward by his yellow curls she drew;
To him, and him alone, confess'd in view.
Dryden's Fables.

2. Undulation; wave; sinuosity; flexure.

Thus it happens, if the glass of the prisms be free from veins, and their sides be accurately plain and well polished, without those numberless waves or curls, which usually arise from the sand holes. Newton's Opticks.

To* CURL. v. a. [krollen, Dut. cyppan, Sax. krille, Dan.]

1. To turn the hair in ringlets.

What hast thou been?—
—A serving man, proud in heart and mind, that curled my hair, wore gloves in my cap, served the lust of my mistress's heart, and did the act of darkness with her. Shakesp. King Lear.

2. To writhe; to twist.

3. To dress with curls.

If she first meet the curled Antony,
He'll make demand of her a kiss. Shakesp.
They, up the trees
Climbing, sat thicker than the snaky locks
That curl'd Megæra. Milton's Par. Lost.

4. To raise in waves, undulations, or sinuosities.

The visitation of the winds,
Who take the ruffian billows by the top,
Curling their monstrous heads.
Shakesp. Henry IV.
Seas would be pools, without the brushing air
To curl the waves. Dryden's Fables.

To* CURL. v. n.

1. To shrink into ringlets.

Those slender aerial bodies are separated and stretched out, which otherwise, by reason of their flexibleness and weight, would flag or curl. Boyle.

2. To rise in undulations.

To every nobler passion of the town
The curling billows rowl their restless tide;
In parties now they straggle up and down,
As armies, unoppos'd, for prey divide.
Dryden.

While curling smoaks from village tops are seen. Pope.

3. To twist itself.

Then round her slender waist he curl'd,
And stamp'd an image of himself, a sov'reign of the world. Dryden's Fables.

CU'RLEW. n. s. [courlieu, Fr. arquata, Lat.]

1. A kind of water-fowl, with a large beak, of a grey colour, with red and black spots.

Among birds we reckon creysers, curlews, and puffins. Carew.

2. A bird larger than a partridge, with longer legs. It runs very swiftly, and frequents the corn-fields in Spain, in Sicily, and sometimes in France. Trevoux.

CURMU'DGEON. n. s. [It is a vitious manner of pronouncing cœur mechant, Fr. an unknown correspondent.] An avaricious churlish fellow; a miser; a niggard; a churl; a griper.

And when he has it in his claws,
He'll not be hide-bound to the cause;
Nor shalt thou find him a curmudgeon,
If thou dispatch it without grudging. Hudibras.

A man's way of living is commended, because he will give any rate for it; and a man will give any rate rather than pass for a poor wretch, or a penurious curmudgeon. Locke.

CURMU'DGEONLY. adj. [from curmudgeon.] Avaricious; covetous; churlish; niggardly.

In a country where he that killed a hog invited the neighbourhood, a curmudgeonly fellow advised with his companions how he might save the charge. L'Estrange.

CU'RRANT. n. s. [ribes, Lat.]

1. The tree hath no prickles; the leaves are large: the flower consists of five leaves, placed in form of a rose: the ovary, which arises from the centre of the flowercup, becomes a globular fruit, produced in bunches.

2. A small dried grape: properly written corinth.

They butter'd currants on fat veal bestow'd,
And rumps of beef with virgin honey stew'd;
Insipid taste, old friend, to them who Paris know,
Where rocombole, shallot, and the rank garlick grow. King.

CU'RRENCY. n. s. [from current.]

1. Circulation; power of passing from hand to hand.

The currency of those half-pence would, in the universal opinion of our people, be utterly destructive to this kingdom. Swift.

2. General reception: as, the report had a long currency.

3. Fluency; readiness of utterance; easiness of pronunciation.

4. Continuance; constant flow; uninterrupted course.

The currency of time to establish a custom, ought to be with a continuando from the beginning to the end of the term prescribed. Ayliffe's Parerg.

5. General esteem; the rate at which any thing is vulgarly valued.

He that thinketh Spain to be some great overmatch for this estate, assisted as it is, and may be, is no good mintman, but takes greatness of kingdoms according to their bulk and currency, and after intrinsick value. Bacon.

6. The papers stamped in the English colonies by authority, and passing for money.

CU'RRENT. adj. [currens, Lat.]

1. Circulatory; passing from hand to hand.

Shekels of silver, current money with the merchant. Gen.

That there was current money in Abraham's time, is past doubt, though it is not sure that it was stampt; for he is said to be rich in cattle, in silver, and in gold. Arbuthnot.

2. Generally received; uncontradicted; authorative.

Many strange bruits are received for current. Sid.

Because such as openly reprove supposed disorders of state are taken for principal friends to the common benefit of all, under this fair and plausible colour, whatsoever they utter passeth for good and current. Hooker.

I have collected the facts, with all possible impartiality, from the current histories of those times. Swift.

3. Common; general.

They have been trained up from their infancy in one set of notions, without ever hearing or knowing what other opinions are current among mankind. Watts.

About three months ago we had a current report of the king of France's death. Addison.

4. Popular; such as is established by vulgar estimation.

We are also to consider the difference between worth an merit, strictly taken: that is a man's intrinsick, this his current, value; which is less or more, as men have occasion for him. Grew's Cosm.

5. Fashionable; popular.

Oft leaving what is natural and fit,
The current folly proves our ready wit;
And authors think their reputation safe,
Which lives as long as fools are pleas'd to laugh. Pope.

6. Passable; such as may be allowed or admitted.

Fouler than heart can think thee, thou canst make
No excuse current, but to hang thyself. Shakesp. Rich. III.

7. What is now passing; what is at present in its course; as the current year.

CU'RRENT. n. s.

1. A running stream.

The current, that with gentle murmur glides,
Thou know'st, being stopp'd, impatiently doth rage
But when his course is not hindred,
He makes sweet musick with th' enamell'd stones. Shakesp.

These inequalities will vanish in one place, and presently appear in another, and seem perfectly to move like waves succeeding and destroying one another; save that their motion oftentimes seems to be quickest, as if in that vast sea they were carried on by a current, or at least by a tide. Boyle.

Heav'n her Eridanus no more shall boast,
Whose fame in thine, like lesser current, 's lost;
Thy nobler streams shall visit Jove's abodes,
To shine among the stars, and bathe the gods. Den.

Not fabled Po more swells the poet's lays,
While through the sky his shining current strays. Pope.

2. [In navigation.] Currents are certain progressive motions of the water of the sea in several places, either quite down to the bottom, or to a certain determinate depth; by which a ship may happen to be carried more swiftly, or retarded in her course, according to the direction of the current, with or against the way of the ship. Harris.

3. Course; progression.

The castle of Cadmus was taken, and Thebes invested by Phebidas the Laccedemonian insidiously; which drew on a resurprize of the castle, a recovery of the town, and a current of the war, even into the walls of Sparta. Bacon.

CU'RRENTLY. adv. [from current.]

1. In a constant motion.

2. Without opposition.

The very cause which maketh the simple and ignorant to think they even see how the word of God runneth currently on your side, is, that their minds are forestalled, and their conceits perverted beforehand. Hooker, Preface.

3. Popularly; fashionably; generally.

4. Without ceasing.

CU'RRENTNESS. n. s. [from current.]

1. Circulation.

2. General reception.

3. Easiness of pronunciation.

When substantialness combineth with delightfulness, and currentness with stayedness, how can the language sound other than most full of sweetness? Camden's Remains.

CU'RRIER. n. s. [coriarius, Lat.] One who dresses and pares leather for those who make shoes, or other things.

A currier bought a bear-skin of a huntsman, and laid him down ready money for it. L'Estr.

Warn'd by frequent ills, the way they found
To lodge their loathsome carrion under ground;
For useless to the currier were their hides,
Nor could their tainted flesh with ocean tides
Be freed from filth. Dryden's Virgil.

CU'RRISH. adj. [from cur.] Having the qualities of a degenerate dog; brutal; sour; quarrelsome; malignant; churlish; uncivil; unattractable; impracticable.

Sweet speaking oft a currish heart reclaims. Sid.

No care of justice, nor no rule of reason,
Did henceforth ever enter in his mind,
But cruelty, the sign of currish kind. Hubb. Tale.

In fashions wayward, and in love unkind;
For Cupid deigns not wound a currish mind. Fairf.

I would she were in heaven, so she could
Entreat some pow'r to change this currish Jew. Shakesp.

She says your dog was a cur; and tells you, currish thanks is good enough for such a present. Shakesp.

To CURRY. v. a. [corium leather, Lat.]

1. To dress leather, by beating and rubbing it.

2. To beat; to drub; to thresh; to chastise.

A deep design in't to divide
The well-affected that confide;
By setting brother against brother,
To claw and curry one another. Hudibras.

I may expect her to take care of her family, and curry her hide in case of refusal. Addison's Spec.

3. To rub a horse with a scratching instrument, so as to smooth his coat, and promote his flesh.

Frictions make the parts more fleshy and full; as we see both in men, and in the currying of horses: the cause is, for that they draw a greater quantity of spirits and blood to the parts. Bacon.

4. To scratch in kindness; to rub down with flattery; to tickle.

If I had a suit to master Shallow, I would humour his men; if to his men, I would curry with master Shallow. Shakesp.

5. To curry Favour. To become a favourite by petty officiousness, slight kindnesses, or flattery.

He judged them still over-abjectly to fawn upon the heathens, and to curry favour with infidels. Hooker.

This humour succeeded so with the puppy, that an ass would go the same way to work to curry favour for himself. L'Estrange.

CU'RRYCOMB. n. s. [from curry and comb.] An iron instrument used for currying or cleaning horses.

He has a clearer idea from a little print than from a long definition; and so he would have of strigil and sistrum, if instead of a currycomb and cymbal, he cou'd see stamped in the margin small pictures of these instruments. Locke.

To CURSE. v. a. [cunnian, Sax.]

1. To wish evil to; to execrate; to devote.

Curse me this people, for they are too mighty for me Numbers.

After Solyman had looked upon the dead body, and bitterly cursed the same, he caused a great weight to be tied unto it, and so cast into the sea. Knolles.

What, yet again! the third time hast thou curst me:
This imprecation was for Laius' death,
And thou hast wished me like him. Dry. and Lee.

2. To mischief; to afflict; to torment.

On impious realms and barb'rous kings impose
The plagues, and curse 'em with such sons as those. Pope.

To CURSE. v. n. To imprecate; to deny or affirm with imprecation of divine vengeance.

Thy silver about which thou cursedst, and speakest of also in my ears, behold the silver is with me. Jud. xvi. 2.

CURSE. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Malediction; wish of evil to another.

Neither have I suffered my mouth to sin, by wishing a curse to his soul. Job

I never went from your lordship, but with a longing to return, or without a hearty curse to him who invented ceremonies, and put me on the necessity of withdrawing. Dryden.

2. Affliction; torment; vexation.

Curse on the stripling! how he apes his sire!
Ambitiously sententious. Addison's Cato.

CU'RSED. participial adj. [from curse.]

1. Deserving a curse; hateful; detestable; abominable; wicked.

Merciful pow'rs!
Restrain in me the cursed thoughts that nature
Gives way to in repose. Shak. Macbeth

2. Unholy; unsanctified: blasted by a curse.

Come, lady, while heav'n lends us grace,
Let us fly this cursed place,
Lest the sorcerer us entice
With some other new device,
Not a waste or needless sound,
Till we come to holier ground. Milton.

3. Vexatious; troublesome.

This cursed quarrel be no more renew'd;
Be, as becomes a wife, obedient still,
Though griev'd, yet subject to her husband's will. Dryden.

One day, I think, in Paradise he liv'd;
Destin'd the next his journey to pursue,
Where wounding thorns and cursed thistles grew. Prior.

CU'RSEDLY. adv. [from cursed.] Miserably; shamefully; a low cant word.

Satisfaction and restitution lies so cursedly hard on the gizzards of our publicans. L'Estrange.

Sure this is a nation that is cursedly afraid of being over-run with too much politeness, and cannot regain one great genius but at the expence of another. Pope.

CU'RSEDNESS. n. s. [from cursed.] The state of being under a curse.

CU'RSHIP. n. s. [from cur.] Dogship; meanness; scoundrelship.

How durst he, I say, oppose thy curship,
'Gainst arms, authority, and worship? Hudibras.

CURSITOR. n. s. [Lat.] An officer or clerk belonging to the Chancery, that makes out original writs. They are called clerks of course, in the oath of the clerks of Chancery. Of these there are twenty-four in number, which have certain shires allotted to each of them, into which they make out such original writs as are required. They are a corporation among themselves. Cowell.

Then is the recognition and value, signed with the handwriting of that justice, carried by the cursitor in Chancery for that shire where those lands do lie, and by him is a writ of covenant thereupon drawn, and ingrossed in parchment. Bacon.

CU'RSORARY. adj. [from cursus, Lat.] Cursory; hasty; careless. A word, I believe, only found in the following line.

I have but with a cursorary eye
O'erglanc'd the articles. Shakesp. Hen. V.

CU'RSORILY. adv. [from cursory.] Hastily; without care; without solicitous attention.

This power, and no other, Luther disowns, as any one that views the place but cursorily must needs see. Atterbury.

CU'RSORINESS. n. s. [from cursory.] Slight attention.

CU'RSORY. adj. [from cursorius, Lat.] Hasty; quick; inattentive; careless.

The first, upon a cursory and superficial view, appeared like the head of another man. Addison

CURST. adj. Froward; peevish; malignant; mischievous; malicious; snarling.

Mr. Mason, after his manner, was very merry with both parties, pleasantly playing both with the shrewd touches of many curst boys, and with the small discretion of many lewd schoolmasters Ascham's Schoolmaster.

Curst cows have short horns. Proverbs.

I pray you, though you mock me, gentlemen,
Let her not hurt me I was never curst,
I have no gift at all in shrewishness,
I am a right maid, for my cowardice;
Let her not strike me. Shakesp Mids Night's Dr.

I'll go see if the bear be gone from the gentleman, and how much he hath eaten: they are never curst but when they are hungry. Shakesp Winter's Tale.

Her only fault, and that is fault enough,
Is, that she is intolerably curst,
And shrewd and forward, so beyond all measure,
That, were my state far worser than it is,
I would not wed her for a mine of gold. Shakesp.

When I dissuaded him from his intent,
And found him pight to do it with curst speech
I threaten'd to discover him. Shak. King Lear.

And though his mind
Be ne'er so curst, his tongue is kind. Crashaw.

CU'RSTNESS. n. s. [from curst.] Peevishness; frowardness; malignity.

Then, noble partners,
Touch you the sourest points with sweetest terms,
Nor curstness grow to the matter
Shakesp. Antony and Cleopatra.

Her mouth she writh'd, her forehead taught to frown,
Her eyes to sparkle fires to love unknown;
Her sallow cheeks her envious mind did shew,
And ev'ry feature spoke aloud the curstness of a shrew. Dryden.

CURT. adj. [from curtus, Lat.] Short.

To CURTAIL. v. a. [curto, Lat.] It was anciently written curtal, which perhaps is more proper; but dogs that had their tails cut being called curtal dogs, the word was vulgarly conceived to mean originally to cut the tail, and was in time written according to that notion.]

1. To cut off; to cut short; to shorten.

I, that am curtail'd of all fair proportion,
Deform'd, unfinish'd, sent before my time
Into this breathing world. Shakesp. Richard III.

Then why should we ourselves abridge,
And curtail our own privilege? Hudibras.

Scribblers send us over their trash in prose and verse, with abominable curtailings and quaint modernisms. Swift.

This general employ, and expence of their time, would as assuredly curtail and retrench the ordinary means of knowledge and erudition, as it would shorten the opportunities of vice. Woodward.

Perhaps this humour of speaking no more than we must, has so miserably curtailed some of our words; and, in familiar writings and conversations, they often lose all but their first syllables. Addison's Spectator.

2. It has of before the thing cut off.

The count assured the court, that Fact his antagonist, had taken a wrong name, having curtailed it of three letters, for that his name was not Fact, but Faction Addison.

CU'RTAIL Dog. n. s. A dog lawed, or mutilated according to the forest laws, whose tail is cut off, and who is therefore hindered in coursing. Perhaps this word may be the original of cur.

I, amazed, ran from her as a witch: and I think if my breast had not been made of faith, and my heart of steel, she had transformed me to a curtail dog, and made me turn i' th' wheel. Shakesp. Comedy of Errours

CU'RTAIN. n. s. [cortina, Lat.]

1. A cloth contracted or expanded at pleasure, to admit or exclude the light; to conceal or discover any thing; to shade a bed; to darken a room.

Their curtains ought to be kept open, so as to renew the air. Arbuthnot on Diet.

Sol through white curtains shot a tim'rous ray,
And op'd those eyes that must eclipse the day. Pope.

Thy hand, great Dulness! lets the curtain fall,
And universal darkness buries all. Pope.

2. To draw the Curtain. To close it, so as to shut out the light, or conceal the object.

I must draw a curtain before the work for a while, and keep your patience a little in suspense. Burnet's Theory.

Once more I write to you, and this once will be the last. the curtain will soon be drawn between my friend and me, and nothing left but to wish you a long good night. Pope.

3. To open it, so as to discern the object.

So soon as the all-cheering sun
Should in the farthest east begin to draw
The shady curtain from Aurora's bed
Shakesp. Romeo and Juliet.

Let them sleep, let them sleep on,
Till this stormy night be gone,
And th' eternal morrow dawn;
Then the curtain will be drawn. Crashaw.

4. [In fortification.] That part of the wall or rampart that lies between two bastions. Military Dict.

The governour, not discouraged, suddenly of timber and boards raised up a curtain twelve foot high, at the back of his soldiers. Knolles.

CURTAIN-LECTURE. n. s. [curtain and lecture.] A reproof given by a wife to her husband in bed.

What endless brawls by wives are bred!
The curtain-lecture makes a mournful bed
Dryden's Juvenal.

She ought to exert the authority of the curtain-lecture, and, if she finds him of a rebellious disposition, to tame him. Addison

To CURTAIN. v. a. [from the noun.] To inclose or accommodate with curtains.

Now o'er one half the world
Nature seems dead, and wicked dreams abuse
The curtain'd sleep. Shak. Macbeth.

The wand'ring prince and Dido,
When with a happy storm they were surpris'd,
And curtain'd with a counsel-keeping cave. Shak.

But, in her temple's last recess inclos'd,
On Dulness' lap th' anointed head repos'd:
Him close she curtain'd round with vapours blue,
And soft besprinkled with Cimmerian dew. Pope.

CURTATE Distance. n. s. [In astronomy.] The distance of a planet's place from the sun, reduced to the ecliptick.

CURTA'TION. n. s. [from curto, to shorten, Lat.] The interval between a planet's distance from the sun and the curtate distance. Chambers.

And the tongue is drawn back and curved.
Holder.

To CURVET. v. n. [corvettare, Ital.]

1. To leap; to bound.

Cry holla! to thy tongue, I pr'ythee, it curvets unseasonably. Shakesp. As you like it.

Himself he on an earwig set,
Yet scarce he on his back could get,
So oft and high he did curvet,
Ere he himself could settle. Drayton.

Seiz'd with unwonted pain, surpris'd with fright,
The wounded steed curvets; and, rais'd upright,
Lights on his feet before: his hoofs behind
Spring up in air aloft, and lash the wind.
Dryden's Æneid.

There was prepared a fleet of thirty ships for the custody of the narrow seas. Bacon.

CU'STOM. n. s. [costume, Fr.]

1. Habit; habitual practice.

Blood and destruction shall be so in use,
That mothers shall but smile when they behold
Their infants quarter'd by the hands of war;
All pity choak'd with custom of fell deeds.
Shakesp. Julius Cæsar.

Custom, a greater power than nature, seldom fails to make them worship. Locke.

2. Fashion; common way of acting.

And the priest's custom with the people was, that when any man offered sacrifice, the priest's servant came, while the flesh was in seething, with a flesh-hook of three teeth in his hands.
1 Sam. ii.

3. Established manner.

According to the custom of the priest's office, his lot was to burn incense when he went into the temple of the Lord. Luke, i.

4. Practice of buying of certain persons.

You may be in possession of his holding, and he not suffered shall try it? Let him bring his voices, but not your votes. Addison.

5. Application from buyers: as, this trader has good custom.

6. [In law.] A law or right not written, which, being established by long use, and the consent of our ancestors, has been, and is daily, practised. We cannot say, that this or that is a custom, except we can justify that it hath continued so one hundred years; yet, because that is hard to prove, it is enough for the proof of a custom, if two or more can depose that they heard their fathers say, that it was a custom all their time; and that their fathers heard their fathers also say, that it was likewise a custom in their time. If it is to be proved, by record, the continuance of a hundred years will serve. Custom is either general or particular: general, that which is current through England; particular, is that which belongs to this or that county; as gavelkind to Kent, or this or that lordship, city, or town. Custom differs from prescription; for custom is common to more, and prescription is particular to this or that man; prescription may be for a far shorter time than custom. Cowell.

7. Tribute; tax paid for goods imported or exported.

The residue of these ordinary finances be casual or uncertain, as be the escheats and forfeitures, the customs, butlerage, and imposts. Bacon.

Those commodities may be dispersed, after having paid the customs in England. Temple.

Customs to steal is such a trivial thing,
That 'tis their charter to defraud their king. Dryd.

Strabo tells you, that Britain bore heavy taxes, especially the customs on the importation of the Gallick trade. Arbuthnot.

CU'STOMHOUSE. n. s. The house where the taxes upon goods imported or exported are collected.

Some customhouse officers, birds of passage, and oppressive thrifty squires, are the only thriving people amongst us. Swift.

1. Frequency; habit.
2. Conformity to custom.

CU'STOMABLY. adv. [from customable.] According to custom.

Kingdoms have customably been carried away by right of succession, according to proximity of blood. Hayward.

CU'STOMARILY. adv. [from customary.] Habitually; commonly.

To call God to witness truth, or a lye perhaps, or to appeal to him on every trivial occasion, in common discourse, customarily without consideration, is one of the highest indignities and affronts that can be offered him. Ray.

CU'STOMARINESS n. s. [from customary.] Frequency; commonness; frequent occurrence.

A vice which for its guilt may justify the sharpest, and for its customariness the frequentest, invectives, which can be made against it.
Government of the Tongue.

CU'STOMARY, adj. [from custom.]

1. Conformable to established custom; according to prescription.

Pray you now, if it may stand with the tune of your voices, that I may be consul: I have here the customary gown. Shakesp.

Several ingenious persons, whose assistance might be conducive to the advance of real and useful knowledge, lay under the prejudices of education and customary belief. Glanville's Scepsis.

2. Habitual.

We should avoid the profane and irreverent use of God's name, by cursing, or customary swearing; and take heed of the neglect of his worship, or any thing belonging to it. Tillotson.

3. Usual; wonted.

Ev'n now I met him
With customary compliment, when he,
Wafting his eyes to th' contrary, and falling
A lip of much contempt, speeds from me. Shak.

CU'STOMED. adj. [from custom.] Usual; common; that to which we are accustomed.

No nat'ral exhalation in the sky,
No common wind, no customed event,
But they will pluck away its nat'ral cause,
And call them meteors, prodigies, and signs.
Shakesp. King John.

CU'STOMER. n. s. [from custom.]

1. One who frequents any place of sale for the sake of purchasing.

One would think it Overdone's house; for here be many old customers. Shakesp. Meas. for Meas.

A wealthy poet takes more pains to hire
A flattering audience, than poor tradesmen do
To persuade customers to buy their goods. Roscom.

Lord Strut has bespoke his liveries at Lewis Baboon's shop: Don't you see how that old fox steals away your customers, and turns you out of your business every day? Arbuthnot.

Those papers are grown a necessary part in coffeehouse furniture, and may be read by customers of all ranks for curiosity or amusement. Swift

I shewed you a piece of black and white stuff, just sent from the dyer, which you were pleased to approve of, and be my customer for. Swift.

2. A common woman. This sense is now obsolete.

I marry her!—What a customer? Pr'ythee bear some charity to my wit, do not think it so unwholesome. Shakesp. Othello.

CU'STREL. n. s.

2. A vessel for holding wine. Ainsworth.

To CUT. pret. cut. part. pass. cut. [probably from the French couteau a knife.]

1. To penetrate with an edged instrument; to divide any continuity by a sharp edge.

Ah, cut my lace asunder,
That my great heart may have some scope to beat,
Or else I swoon with this dead killing news.
Shakesp. Richard III.

And when two hearts were join'd by mutual love,
The sword of justice cuts upon the knot,
And severs 'em for ever. Dryden's Spanish Friar.

Some I have cut away with scissars.
Wiseman's Surgery.

2. To hew.

Thy servants can skill to cut timber in Lebanon.
2 Chron. ii.

3. To carve; to make by sculpture.

Why should a man, whose blood is warm within,
Sit like his grandsire cut in alabaster? Shakesp.

The triumphal is defaced by time; but the plan of it is neatly cut upon the wall of a neighbouring building. Addison.

4. To form any thing by cutting.

And they did beat the gold into thin plates, and cut it into wires. Exod. xxxix. 3.

5. To divide by passing through.

Before the whistling winds the vessels fly,
With rapid swiftness cut the liquid way,
And reach Gerestus at the point of day.
Pope's Odyssey.

6. To pierce with any uneasy sensation.

The man was cut to the heart with these consolations. Addison.

7. To divide packs of cards.

Supine they in their heav'n remain,
Exempt from passion and from pain;
And frankly leave us, human elves,
To cut and shuffle for ourselves. Prior.

We sure in vain the cards condemn,
Ourselves both cut and shuffled them. Prior.

Take a fresh pack, nor is it worth our grieving,
Who cuts or shuffles with our dirty leaving.
Granville.

8. To intersect; to cross: as, one line cuts another at right angles.

This serous, nutritious mass is more readily circulated into the cutaneous or remotest parts of the body. Floyer on Humours.

Some sorts of cutaneous eruptions are occasioned by feeding much on acid unripe fruits and farinaceous substances. Arbuthnot.

Cu'ticle. n. s. [cuticula, Lat.]

1. The first and outermost covering of the body, commonly called the scarf-skin. This is that soft skin which rises in a blister upon any burning, or the application of a blistering plaster. It sticks close to the surface of the true skin, to which it is also tied by the vessels which nourish it, though they are so small as not to be seen. When the scarf-skin is examined with a microscope, it appears to be made up of several lays of exceeding small scales. Quincy.
   In each of the very fingers there are bones and gristles, and ligaments and membranes, and muscles, and tendons, and nerves and arteries, and veins and skin, and cuticle and nail. Bentley's Serm.
2. A thin skin formed on the surface of any liquor.
   When any saline liquor is evaporated to cuticle, and let cool, the salt concretes in regular figures; which argues that the particles of the salt, before they concreted, floated in the liquor at equal distances in rank and file, Newton's Opticks.

Cuti'cular. adj. [from cutis, Lat.] Belonging to the skin.

Cuth, signifies knowledge or skill. So Cuthwin is a knowing conqueror; Cuthred, a knowing counsellor; Cuthbert, famous for skill. Much of the same nature are Sophocles and Sophianus. Gibson's Camden.

Cu'tlass. n. s. [coutelas, Fr.] This word is written sometimes cutlace, sometimes cuttleax; in Shakespeare, curtleaxe; and in Pope, cutlash.] A broad cutting sword: the word is much in use among the seamen.
   Were 't not better
   That I did suit me all points like a man?
   A gallant curtleaxe upon my thigh,
   A boar-spear in my hand. Shakesp. As you like it.
   To the lodgments of his herd he run,
   Where the fat porkets slept beneath the sun;
   Of two his cutlash launch'd the spouting blood,
   These quarter'd, sing'd, and fix'd on forks of wood. Pope.

Cu'tler. n. s. [coutelier, Fr.] One who makes or sells knives.
   A paultry ring
   That she did give, whose posy was
   For all the world like cutlers poetry
   Upon a knife; love me, and leave me not. Shak.
   In a bye cutler's shop he bought a tenpenny knife: so cheap was the instrument of this great attempt. Wotton.
   He chose no other instrument than an ordinary knife, which he bought of a common cutler. Clarendon.

Cu'tpurse. n. s. [cut and purse.] One who steals by the method of cutting purses: a common practice when men wore their purses at their girdles, as was once the custom. A thief; a robber.
   To have an open ear, a quick eye, and a nimble hand, is necessary for a cutpurse. Shakesp. Winter's Tale.
   A vice of kings,
   A cutpurse of the empire and the rule,
   That from a shelf the precious diadem stole,
   And put it in his pocket. Shak. Hamlet.
   Was there no felony, no bawd,
   Cutpurse, nor burglary abroad? Hudibras.
   If we could imagine a whole nation to be cutpurses and robbers, would there then be kept that square dealing and equity in such a monstrous den of thieves? Bentley's Sermons.

Cu'tter. n. s. [from cut.]

1. An agent or instrument that cuts any thing.
2. A nimble boat that cuts the water.
3. [Incisores.] The teeth that cut the meat.
   The molares, or grinders, are behind, nearest the centre of motion, because there is a greater strength or force required to chew the meat than to bite a piece; and the cutters before, that they may be ready to cut off a morsel from any solid food, to be transmitted to the grinders. Ray on the Creation.
4. An officer in the Exchequer that provides wood for the tallies, and cuts the sum paid upon them; and then casts the same into the court to be written upon. Cowell.

Cu't-throat. n. s. [cut and throat.] A ruffian; a murderer; a butcher of men; an assassin.
   Will you then suffer these robbers, cut-throats, base people, gathered out of all the corners of Christendom, to waste your countries, spoil your cities, murder your people, and trouble all your seas? Knolles.
   Perhaps the cut-throat may rather take his copy from the Parisian massacre, one of the horridest instances of barbarous inhumanity that ever was known. South.
   The ruffian robbers by no justice aw'd,
   And unpaid cut-throat soldiers are abroad;
   Those venial souls, who, harden'd in each ill,
   To save complaints and prosecution, kill. Dryden's Juvenal.

Cu't-throat. adj. Cruel; inhuman; barbarous.
   If to take above fifty in the hundred be extremity, this in truth can be none other than cut-throat and abominable dealing. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

Cu'tting. n. s. [from cut.] A piece cut off; a chop.
   The burning of the cuttings of vines, and casting them upon land, doth much good. Bacon's Nat. H.
   Many are propagated above ground by slips or cuttings. Ray.

CUTTLE. n. s. [sepia.] A fish, which, when he is pursued by a fish of prey, throws out a black liquor, by which he darkens the water and escapes.

It is somewhat strange, that the blood of all birds, and beasts, and fishes, should be of a red colour, and only the blood of the cuttle should be as black as ink. Bacon.

He that uses many words for the explaining any subject, doth, like the cuttle fish, hide himself for the most part in his own ink. Ray on the Creation.

CU'TTLE. n. s. [from cuttle.] A foul-mouthed fellow; a fellow who blackens the character of others. Hanmer.

Away, you cutpurse rascal; you filthy bung, away: by this wine, I'll thrust my knife in your mouldy chaps, if you play the saucy cuttle with me. Shakesp. Henry IV.

CY'CLE. n. s. [cyclus, Lat. κύκλος.]

1. A circle.
2. A round of times; a space in which the same revolutions begin again; a periodical space of time.

We do more commonly use these words, so as to style a lesser space a cycle, and a greater by the name of period; and you may not improperly call the beginning of a large period the epocha thereof. Holder on Time.

3. A method, or account of a method, continued till the same course begins again.

We thought we should not attempt an unacceptable work, if here we endeavoured to present our gardeners with a complete cycle of what is requisite to be done throughout every month of the year. Evelyn's Kalendar.

4. Imaginary orbs; a circle in the heavens.

How build, unbuild, contrive
To save appearances; how gird the sphere
With centrick, and excentrick, scribbled o'er
Cycle and epicycle, orb in orb! Milton.

CY'CLOID. n. s. [from κυκλοειδής, of κύκλος, and εἶδος shape.] A geometrical curve, of which the genesis may be conceived by imagining a nail in the circumference of a wheel: the line which the nail describes in the air, while the wheel revolves in a right line, is the cycloid.

CYCLO'IDAL. adj. [from cycloid.] Relating to a cycloid; as the cycloidal space, is the space contained between the cycloid and its substance. Chambers.

CYCLOPÆDI'A. n. s. [κύκλος and παιδεία.] A circle of knowledge; a course of the sciences.

CY'GNET. n. s. [from cycnus, Lat.] A young swan.

I am the cygnet to this pale faint swan,
Who chaunts a doleful hymn to his own death.
Shakesp. King John.

So doth the swan her downy cygnets save,
Keeping them pris'ners underneath her wings.
Shak. Henry VI.

Cygnets, from grey, turn white. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

Young cygnets are good meat, if fatted with oats; but, fed with weeds, they taste fishy. Mortimer's Husbandry.

CY'LINDER. n. s. [κύλινδρος.] A body having two flat surfaces and one circular. The quantity of water which every revolution does carry, according to any inclination of the cylinder, may be easily found. Wilkins.

The square will make you ready for all manner of compartments, bases, pedestals, plots, and buildings; your cylinder, for vaulted turrets, and round buildings. Peacham.

CYLI'NDRICAL. } adj. [from cylinder.]
CYLI'NDRICK. } Partaking of the nature of a cylinder; having the form of a cylinder.

Minera ferri stalactitis, when several of the cylindrick striæ are contiguous, and grow together into one sheaf, is called brushiron ore. Woodward's Natural History.

Obstructions must be most incident to such parts of the body where the circulation and the elastick fibres are both smallest, and those glands, which are the extremities of arteries formed into cylindrical canals. Arbuth. on Alim.

CYMA'R. n. s. [properly written simar.] A slight covering; a scarf.

Her comely limbs compos'd with decent care,
Her body shaded with a slight cymar;
Her bosom to the view was only bare. Dryd.

CYMA'TIUM. n. s. [Lat. from κυμάτιον a little wave.] A member of architecture, whereof one half is convex, and the other concave. There are two sorts, of which one is hollow below, as the other is above. Harris.

In a cornice, the gola, or cymatium of the corona, the coping, the modillions, or dentelli, make a noble show by their grace ful projetions. Spectator

CY'MBAL. n. s. [cymbalum, Lat.] A musical instrument.

The trumpets, sackbuts, psalteries, and fifes,
Tabors, and cymbals, and the shouting Romans,
Make the sun dance. Shakesp. Coriolanus

If mirth should fail, I'll busy her with cares,
Silence her clamorous voice with louder wars;
Trumpets and drums shall fright her from the throne,
As sounding cymbals aid the lab'ring moon.
Dryden's Aurengzebe.

CYNA'NTHROPY. n. s. [κυων κυνος, and ἄνθρωπος.] A species of madness in which men have the qualities of dogs.

CYNARCTO'MACHY. [κυων, ἀρκτος, μαχη.] A word coined by Butler, to denote bear-baiting with a dog.

That some occult design doth lie
In bloody cynarctomachy,
Is plain enough to him that knows
How saints lead brothers by the nose. Hudibras.

CYNEGE'TICKS. n. s. [κυνηγετικος.] The art of hunting; the art of training and hunting with dogs.

There are extant, in Greek, four books of cynegeticks, or venation. Brown's Vulg Err.

CY'NICAL. } adj. [κύνικος.] Having the CY'NICK. } qualities of a dog; currish; brutal; snarling; satirical.

He doth believe that some new-fangled wit (it is his cynical phrase) will some time or other find out his art. Wilkins

CY'NICK. n. s. [κύνικος.] A philosopher of the snarling or currish sort; a follower of Diogenes; a rude man; a snarler; a misanthrope.

How vilely doth this cynick rhime!—
Get you hence, sirrah; saucy fellow, hence. Shak.

Without these precautions the man degenerates into a cynick, the woman into a coquette; the man grows sullen and morose, the woman impertinent and fantastical. Addison.

CY'NOSURE. n. s. [from κύων οὐρά.] The star near the north pole, by which sailors steer.

Towers and battlements it sees
Bosom'd high in tufted trees,
Where perhaps some beauty lies,
The cynosure of neighbouring eyes. Milton

CY'ON. See CION.

CY'PRESS-TREE. n. s. [cupressus, Lat.]

1. The cypress is a tall straight tree, produced with great difficulty. Its fruit is of no use: its leaves are bitter, and the very smell and shade of it are dangerous. Hence the Romans looked upon it to be a fatal tree, and made use of it at funerals, and in mournful ceremonies. The cypress-tree is always green, and never either rots or is worm eaten. Calmet.

In ivory coffers I have stuff'd my crowns;
In cypress chests my arras counterpanes. Shakesp.

He taketh the cypress and the oak, which he strengtheneth for himself among the trees of the forest. Isa. xliv. 14.

Poplars and alders ever-quivering play'd,
And nodding cypress form'd a fragrant shade.
Pope's Odyssey.

2. Being anciently used in funerals, it is the emblem of mourning.

Poison be their drink,
Their sweetest shade a grove of cypress trees.
Shakesp. Henry VI.

CY'PRUS. n. s. [I suppose from the place where it was made; or corruptly from cypress, as being used in mourning.] A thin transparent black stuff.

Lawn as white as driven snow,
Cyprus black as e'er was crow. Shak. Wint. Tale.

A cyprus, not a bosom,
Hides my poor heart! Shakesp.

CYST. } n. s. [κυστις.] A bag containing CY'STIS. } some morbid matter.

In taking it out, the cystis broke, and shewed itself by its matter to be a meliceris. Wiseman's Surgery.

There may be a consumption, with a purulent spitting, when the vomica is contained in a cyst or bag; upon the breaking of which the patient is commonly suffocated. Arbuthnot on Diet.

CY'STICK. adj. [from cyst a bag.] Contained in a bag.

The bile is of two sorts: the cystick, or that contained in the gall-bladder, a sort of repository for the gall; or the hepatick, or what flows immediately from the liver. Arbuthnot.

CYSTO'TOMY. n. s. [κύστις and τέμνω.] The act or practice of opening incysted tumours, or cutting the bag in which any morbid matter is contained.

CZAR. n. s. [A Sclavonian word, written more properly tzar.] The title of the emperour of Russia.

CZARI'NA. n. s. [from czar.] The empress of Russia.

D.

D. Is a consonant nearly approaching in sound to T, but formed by a stronger appulse of the tongue to the upper part of the mouth. The sound of D in English is uniform, and it is never mute.

DACA'PO. [Ital.] A term in musick, which signifying from the head or the beginning, means that the first part of the tune should be repeated at the conclusion.

To DAB. v. a. [dauber, Fr.] To strike gently with something soft or moist.

DA'B-CHICK. n. s. A small water fowl, called likewise Dobchick, and Didapper, and Dipchick. Colymbus. Ray.

A dab-chick waddles through the copse
On feet and wings, and flies, and wades, and hops Pope

To DA'BBLE. v. a. [dabbelen, Dut.] To smear; to daub; to spatter; to besprinkle; to wet.

A shadow, like an angel, with bright hair
Dabbled in blood. Shakesp. Richard III.

I scarrified, and dabbled the wound with oil of turpentine. Wiseman's Surgery.

Mean while the South, rising with dabbled wings,
A sable cloud athwart the welkin flings. Swift.

To DA'BBLE. v. n.

1. To play in water; to move in water or mud.

Neither will a spirit, that dwells with stars, dabble in this impurer mind Glanville's Apol

The little one complained of her legs, that she could neither swim nor dabble with them. L'Est.

But when he found the boys at play,
An I saw them dabbling in their clay,
He stood behind a staff to lurk,
And mark the progress of their work. Swift.

2. To do any thing in a slight, superficial, or shallow manner; to tamper.

Shakespeare shall be put into your hands, as clear and as fair as it came out of them: though you, I think, have been dabbling here and three [illegible] text, I have had more reverence for the [illegible] and the printer, and left every thing standing. Atterbury to Pope.

DA'BBLER. n. s. [from dabble.]

1. One that plays in water.
2. One that meddles without mastery; one that never goes to the bottom of an affair; a superficial meddler.

He dares not complain of the tooth-ach, lest our dabblers in politicks should be ready to swear against him for disaffection. Swift

DACE. n. s. [of uncertain derivation: in most provinces called dare. Leuciscus.] A small river fish, resembling a roach, but less.

Let me live harmlessly, and near the brink
Of Trent or Avon have a dwelling place;
Where I may see my quill or cork down sink
With eager bite of perch, or bleak, or dace. Walt.

DA'CTYLE. n. s. [δακτυλος a finger.] A poetical foot consisting of one long syllable and two short, like the joints of a finger; as cāndidūs.

DAD. } n. s. [The child's way of ex-
DA'DDY. } pressing father. It is remarkable, that, in all parts of the world, the word for father, as first taught to children, is compounded of a and t, or the kindred letter d, differently placed; as tad, Welsh; αττα, Gr. atta, Gothick; tata, Lat.] Father.

I was never so bethumpt with words,
Since first I called my brother's father dad. Shak

His loving mother left him to my care;
Fine child, as like his dad as he could stare! Gay.

To DADE. v. a. To hold up by a leading string.

The little children, when they learn to go,
By painful mothers daded to and fro Drayton.

DÆDAL. adj. [dædalus, Lat.]

1. Various; variegated.
2. Skilful; this is not the true meaning, nor should be imitated.

Nor hath
The dædal hand of nature only pour'd
Her gifts of outward grace. Philips

DA'FFODIL. }
DAFFODI'LLY. }
DAFFODOWNDI'LLY. } n. s. [Supposed by Skinner to be corrupted from asphodelus.]

This plant hath a lily-flower, consisting of one leaf, which is bell-shaped, and cut into six segments, which incircle its middle like a crown; but the empalement, which commonly rises out of a membranous vagina, turns to an oblong or roundish fruit, which is triangular, and gapes in three parts; is divided into three cells, and full of roundish seeds. Miller.

Strew me the green round with daffodowndillies,
And cowslips, and kingcups, and loved lilies.
Spenser.

Bid amaranthus all his beauty shed,
And daffodillies fill their cups with tears,
To strew the laureat herse where Lycid lies. Milt

The daughters of the flood have search'd the mead
For violets pale, and cropp'd the poppy's head:
The short narcissus, and fair daffodil,
Pancies to please the sight, and cassia sweet to smell. Dryden

To DAFT. v. a. [contracted from do aft; that is, to throw back, to throw off.] To toss aside; to put away with contempt; to throw away slightly. Not now in use.

The nimble-footed mad-cap prince of Wales,
And his comrades, that daft the world aside,
And bid it pass. Shakesp. Henry IV.

I would she had bestow'd this dotage on me! I would have daft all other respects, and made her half myself. Shakesp.

DAG. n. s. [dague, Fr.]

1. A dagger.
2. A handgun; a pistol: so called from serving the purposes of a dagger, being carried secretly, and doing mischief suddenly. It is in neither sense now used.

To DAG. v. a. [from daggle.] To daggle; to bemire; to let fall in the water: a low word.

DA'GGER. n. s. [dague, Fr.]

1. A short sword; a poniard.

She ran to her son's dagger, and struck herself a mortal wound. Sidney.

This sword a dagger had his page,
And was but little for his age;
And therefore waited on him so
As dwarfs upon knights-errant do. Hudibras.

He strikes himself with his dagger; but being interrupted by one of his friends, he stabs him, and breaks the dagger on one of his ribs Addison.

2. [In fencing schools.] A blunt blade of iron with a basket hilt, used for defence.
3. [With printers.] The obelisk; a mark of reference in form of a dagger; as [†].

DA'GGERSDRAWING. n. s. [dagger and draw.] The act of drawing daggers; approach to open violence.

They always are at daggersdrawing,
And one another clapperclawing. Hudibras.

I have heard of a quarrel in a tavern, where all were at daggersdrawing, till one desired to know the subject of the quarrel. Swift.

To DA'GGLE. v. a. [from dag dew; a word, according to Mr. Lye, derived from the Danish; according to Skinner, from dag sprinkled, or degan to dip. They are probably all of the same root.] To dip negligently in mire or water; to bemire; to besprinkle.

To DA'GGLE. v. n. To be in the mire; to run through wet or dirt.

Nor like a puppy, daggled through the town,
To fetch and carry sing-song up and down. Pope.

DAGGLEDTAIL. [daggle and tail.] Bemired; dipped in the water or mud; bespattered.

The gentlemen of wit and pleasure are apt to be choaked at the sight of so many daggledtail parsons, that happen to fall in their way. Swift.

DA'ILY. adj. [dæglic, Sax.] Happening every day, or very frequently; done every day; quotidian.

Much are we bound to heaven
In daily thanks, that gave us such a prince. Shak

Cease, man of woman born! to hope relief
From daily trouble, and continued grief. Prior.

DAI'LY. adv. Every day; very often.

Let that man with better sense advise,
That of the world least part to us is read;
And daily how through hardy enterprise
Many great regions are discovered. Fairy Queen.

A man with whom I conversed almost daily for years together. Dryden.

DAI'NTILY. adv. [from dainty.]

1. Elegantly; delicately.

Truth is a naked and open day-light, that doth not shew the masks and mummeries and triumphs of the world, half so stately and daintily as candlelight. Bacon.

2. Deliciously; pleasantly.

There is no region on earth so daintily watered, with such great navigable rivers. Howel's Vocal F.

Those young sisters had been accustomed to nothing but to sleep well, and fare daintily.
Broome's View of Epick Poems.

3. Nicely; ceremoniously; scrupulously.
4. Squeamishly; fastidiously.

DA'INTINESS. n. s. [from dainty.]

1. Delicacy; softness.

Daintiness and softer ease,
Sleeked limbs and finest blood? Ben Jonson.
2. Elegance; nicety.
The duke exceeded in the daintiness of his leg and foot, and the earl in the fine shape of his hands. Wotton.
3. Delicacy; deliciousness.
It was more notorious for the daintiness of the provision which he served in it, than for the massiness of the dish. Hakewill on Providence.
4. Squeamishness; fastidiousness.
Of sand, and lime, and clay, Vitruvius hath discoursed without any daintiness. Wotton.
5. Ceremoniousness; scrupulosity.

DA'INTY. adj. [derived by Skinner from dain, an old French word for delicate; which yet I cannot find in dictionaries.]

1. Pleasing to the palate; of exquisite taste; delicious.
Higher concoction is required for sweetness, or pleasure of taste, and therefore all your dainty plumbs are a little dry. Bacon.
2. Delicate; of acute sensibility; nice; squeamish; soft; luxurious; tender.
This is the slowest, yet the daintiest sense;
For ev'n the ears of such as have no skill
Perceive a discord, and conceive offence;
And knowing not what's good, yet find the ill.
Davies.
They were a fine and dainty people; frugal and yet elegant, though not military. Bacon.
3. Scrupulous; ceremonious.
Which of you all
Will now deny to dance? She that makes dainty,
I'll swear hath corns. Shakesp. Romeo and Juliet.
Therefore to horse;
And let us not be dainty of leave-taking,
But shift away. Shak. Macbeth.
4. Elegant; tenderly, languishingly, or effeminately beautiful.
My house, within the city,
Is richly furnished with plate and gold,
Basons and ewers to lave her dainty hands. Shak.
Why should ye be so cruel to yourself,
And to those dainty limbs, which nature lent
For gentle usage and soft delicacy? Milton.
5. Nice; affectedly fine: in contempt.
Your dainty speakers have the curse,
To plead bad causes down to worse. Prior.

DA'INTY. n. s.

1. Something nice or delicate; a delicacy; something of exquisite taste.
Be not desirous of his dainties; for they are deceitful meat. Proverbs, xxiii. 3.
A worm breedeth in meal, of the shape of a large white maggot, which is given as a great dainty to nightingales. Bacon.
She then produc'd her dairy store,
And unbought dainties of the poor. Dryden.
The shepherd swains, with sure abundance blest,
On the fat flock and rural dainties feast. Pope.
2. A word of fondness formerly in use.
Why, that's my dainty; I shall miss thee;
But yet thou shalt have freedom. Shakesp. Tempest.
There's a fortune coming
Towards you, dainty, that will take thee thus,
And set thee aloft. Ben Jonson.

DA'IRY. n. s. [from dey, an old word for milk. Mr. Lye.]

1. The occupation or art of making various kinds of food from milk.
Grounds were turned much in England either to feeding or dairy; and this advanced the trade of English butter. Temple.
2. The place where milk is manufactured.
You have no more worth
Than the coarse and country fairy,
That doth haunt the hearth or dairy. Ben Jonson.
What stores my dairies and my folds contain!
A thousand lambs that wander on the plain. Dryd.
She in pens his flocks will fold,
And then produce her dairy store. Dryden.
3. Pasturage; milk farm; ground where milch cattle are kept.
Dairies, being well housewived, are exceeding commodious. Bacon.
Children, in dairy countries, do wax more tall than where they feed more upon bread and flesh. Bacon.

DAI'RYMAID. n. s. [dairy and maid.] The woman servant whose business is to manage the milk.
The poorest of the sex have still an itch
To know their fortunes, equal to the rich;
The dairymaid enquires if she shall take
The trusty taylor, and the cook forsake. Dryden.
Come up quickly, or we shall conclude that thou art in love with one of Sir Roger's dairymaids. Addison.

DA'ISY. n. s. [ꝺæȝeȝeage day's eye. Chaucer.] A spring flower.
It hath a perennial root; the stalks are naked, and never branch out: the cup of the flower is scaly and simple, divided into many segments to the foot-stalk. The flowers are radiated; and the heads, after the petals are fallen off, resemble obtuse cones. Miller.
When daisies pied, and violets blue,
And lady smocks all over white,
And cuckoo buds of yellow hue,
Do paint the meadows much bedight. Shakesp.
As he passed, the woods put forth their blossoms, the earth her primroses and days-eyes, to behold him. Howel.
Now hawthorns blossom, now the daisies spring;
Now leaves the trees, and flow'rs adorn the ground.
Pope.
This will find thee picking of daisies, or smelling to a lock of hay. Addison.
Fair handed Spring unbosoms every grace;
The daisy, primrose, violet. Thomson.

DALE. n. s. [dalei, Gothick; dal, Dut. and Germ.] A low place between hills; a vale; a valley.
Long tost with storms, and beat with bitter winds,
High over hills, and low adown the dale,
She wander'd many a wood, and measur'd many a vale. Fairy Queen.
Before the downfall of the fairy state,
This dale, a pleasing region, not unblest,
This dale possess'd they, and had still possess'd.
Tickell
He steals along the lonely dale. Thoms. Spring

DA'LLIANCE. n. s. [from dally.]

1. Interchange of caresses; acts of fondness.
Look thou be true: do not give dalliance
To much the rein: the strongest oaths are straw
To th' fire i' th' blood. Shakesp. Tempest.
Nor gentle purpose, nor endearing smiles,
Wanted; nor youthful dalliance, as beseems
Fair couple link'd in happy nuptial league,
Alone as they. Milton.
I'll head my people;
Then think of dalliance when the danger's o'er:
My warlike spirits work now another way,
And my soul's tun'd to trumpets. Dryden.
2. Conjugal conversation.
The giant, self-dismayed with the sound,
Where he with his Duessa dalliance found,
In haste came rushing forth from inner bow'r.
Fairy Queen.
That bower not mystick, where the sapient king
Held dalliance with his fair Egyptian spouse.
Milton.
3. Delay; procrastination.
Both wind and tide stay for this gentleman;
And I, to blame, have held him here too long.—
—Good lord, you use this dalliance to excuse
Your breach of promise. Shakesp.

DA'LLIER. n. s. [from dally.] A trifler; a fondler.
The daily dalliers with pleasant words, with smiling countenances, and with wagers purposed to be lost before they were purposed to be made
Ascham

DA'LLOP. n. s. [of unknown etymology. A tuft, or clump: not in use.
Of barley, the finest and greenest ye find,
Leave standing in dallops till time ye do bind. Tusser.

To DA'LLY. v. n. [dollen, Dut. to trifle.]

1. To trifle; to play the fool; to amuse one's self with idle play; to lose time in trifles; to procrastinate idly.
Take up thy master:
If thou shouldst dally half an hour, his life,
With thine and all that offer to defend him,
Stand in assured loss. Shakesp. King Lear
He left his cur, and laying hold
Upon his arms, with courage bold
Cried out, 'tis now no time to dally,
The enemy begin to rally. Hudibras.
We have trifled too long already: it is madness to dally any longer, when our souls are at stake.
Calamy's Sermons.
One hundred thousand pounds must be raised; for there is no dallying with hunger. Swift.
2. To exchange caresses; to play the wanton; to fondle.
He is not lolling on a lewd love bed,
But on his knees at meditation;
Not dallying with a brace of courtesans,
But meditating with two deep divines. Shakesp.
3. To sport; to play; to frolick.
She her airie buildeth in the cedar's top,
And dallies with the wind, and scorns the sun.
Shakesp.
4. To delay.
They that would not be reformed by that correction, wherein he dallied with them, shall feel a judgment worthy of God. Wisdom, xii. 26.

To DA'LLY. v. a. To put off; to delay; to amuse till a proper opportunity.
He sat down to perform service, not by the hazard of one set battle, but by dallying off the time with often skirmishes. Knolles's Hist.

DAM. n. s. [from dame, which formerly signified mother. Had Nero never been an emperour, shoulde never his dame have be slaine. Chaucer.]

1. The mother: used of beast, or other animals not human.
The dam runs lowing up and down,
Looking the way her harmless young one went,
And can do nought but wail her darling loss. Shak.
Mother, says a sick kite, let me have your prayers.—Alas, my child, says the dam, which of the gods shall I go to? L'Estrange.
Birds bring but one morsel of meat at a time, and have not fewer, it may be, than seven or eight young in the nest together, which, at the return of their dams, do all at once, with equal greediness, hold up their heads and gape. Ray.
2. A human mother, in contempt or detestation.
This brat is none of mine;
It is the issue of Polixenes:
Hence with it, and, together with the dam,
Commit them to the fire. Shakesp. Winter's Tale.

DAM. n. s. [dam, Dut.] A mole or bank to confine water.
As when the sea breaks o'er its bounds,
And overflows the level grounds,
Those banks and dams, that like a skreen
Did keep it out, now keep it in. Hudibras

Not with so fierce a rage the foaming flood
Roars, when he finds his rapid course withstood;
Bears down the dams with unresisted sway,
And sweeps the cattle and the cots away. Dryd.

Let loose the reins to all your wat'ry store,
Bear down the dams, and open every door. Dryd.

The inside of the dam must be very smooth and streight; and if it is made very sloping on each side, it is the better. Mortimer's Husbandry.

To DAM. v. a. [bemman, ponebemman, Sax. dammen, Dut.]

1. To confine, or shut up, water by moles or dams.

I'll have the current in this place damm'd up;
And here the smug and silver Trent shall run
In a new channel, fair and evenly. Shakesp. H. VI.

Home I would go,
But that my doors are hateful to my eyes,
Fill'd and damm'd up with gaping creditors,
Watchful as fowlers when their game will spring. Otway.

Boggy lands are fed by springs, pent by a weight of earth, that dams in the water, and causes it to spread. Mortimer.

'Tis you must drive that trouble from your soul;
As streams, when damm'd, forget their ancient current,
And, wond'ring at their banks, in other channels flow. Smith.

2. It is used by Shakespeare of fire, and by Milton of light.

The more thou damm'st it up, the more it burns. Shakesp.

Moon! if your influence be quite damm'd up
With black usurping mists, some gentle taper,
Though a rush-candle from the wicker hole
Of some clay habitation, visit us
With thy long levell'd rule of streaming light. Milton

DA'MAGE. n. s. [domage, Fr.]

1. Mischief; hurt; detriment.

Gross errours and absurdities many commit for want of a friend to tell them of them, to the great damage both of their fame and fortune. Bacon.

Such as were sent from thence did commonly do more hurt and damage to the English subjects than to the Irish enemies, by their continual cess and extortion. Davies.

He repulsed the enemy very much to their damage. Clarendon.

2. Loss; mischief suffered.

His heart exalts him in the harm
Already done, to have dispeopled heav'n,
My damage fondly deem'd! Milton.

3. The value of mischief done.

They believed that they were not able, though they should be willing to sell all they have in Ireland, to pay the damages which had been sustained by the war. Clarendon.

4. Reparation of damage; retribution.

The bishop demanded restitution of the spoils taken by the Scots, or damages for the same. Bacon.

Tell me whether, upon exhibiting the several particulars which I have related to you, I may not sue her for damages in a court of justice? Addison.

5. [In law.] Any hurt or hindrance that a man taketh in his estate. In the common law it particularly signifies a part of what the jurors be to enquire of; for, after verdict given of the principal cause, they are likewise asked their consciences touching costs, which are the charges of suit, and damages, which contain the hindrance which the plaintiff, or demandant hath suffered, by means of the wrong done him by the defendant or tenant. Cowell.

When the judge had awarded due damages to a person into whose field a neighbour's oxen had broke, it is reported that he reversed his own sentence, when he heard that the oxen, which had done this mischief, were his own. Watts.

To DA'MAGE. v. a. [from the noun.] To mischief; to injure; to impair; to hurt; to harm.

I consider time as an immense ocean, into which many noble authors are entirely swallowed up, many very much shattered and damaged, some quite disjointed and broken into pieces. Addison.

To DA'MAGE. v. n. To take damage, or be damaged.

DA'MAGEABLE. adj. [from damage.]

1. Susceptible of hurt: as, damageable goods.

2. Mischievous; pernicious.

Obscene and immodest talk is offensive to the purity of God, damageable and infectious to the innocence of our neighbours, and most pernicious to ourselves. Government of the Tongue.

DA'MASCENE. n. s. [damascenus, from Damascus.] A small plum; a damson, as it is now spoken.

In April follow the cherry-tree in blossom, the damascene and plum-trees in blossom, and the white thorn in leaf. Bacon.

In fruits the white commonly is meaner, as in pear plums and damascenes; and the choicest plums are black. Bacon.

DA'MASK. n. s. [damasquin, Fr. damaschino, Ital. from Damascus.]

1. Linen or silk woven in a manner invented at Damascus, by which part, by a various direction of the threads, exhibits flowers or other forms.

Not any weaver which his work doth boast
In diaper, damask, or in lyne. Spenser.

Wipe your shoes, for want of a clout, with a damask napkin. Swift's Rules to Servants.

2. It is used for red colour in Fairfax, from the damask rose.

And for some deale perplexed was her spirit,
Her damask late, now chang'd to purest white. Fairfax.

To DA'MASK. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To form flowers upon stuffs.

2. To variegate; to diversify.

They sat recline
On the soft downy bank, damask'd with flowers. Milton.

Around him dance the rosy hours,
And damasking the ground with flow'rs,
With ambient sweets perfume the morn. Fenton.

3. To adorn steel-work with figures; practised, I suppose, first at Damascus.

DAMASK-PLUM. See PLUM.

DAMASK-ROSE. n. s. The rose of Damascus; a red rose. See ROSE.

Damask-roses have not been known in England above one hundred years, and now are so common. Bacon.

No gradual bloom is wanting from the bud,
Nor broad carnations, nor gay spotted pinks,
Nor, shower'd from ev'ry bush the damask-rose. Thomson.

DA'MASKENING. n. s. [from damasquiner, Fr.] The art or act of adorning iron or steel, by making incisions, and filling them up with gold or silver wire: used in enriching the blades of swords, and locks of pistols. Chambers.

DAME. n. s. [dame, Fr. dama, Span.]

1. A lady; the old title of honour to women.

The word dame originally signified a mistress of a family, who was a lady; and it is used still in the English law to signify a lady: but in common use, now-a-days, it represents a farmer's wife or a mistress of a family of the lower rank in the country. Watts's Logick.

Bless you, fair dame! I am not to you known,
Though in your state of honour I am perfect. Shak.

Not all these lords do vex me half so much
As that proud dame, the lord protector's wife. Shak.

Shut your mouth, dame! Shakesp. King Lear.

Sov'reign of creatures, universal dame! Milton.

2. It is still used in poetry for women of rank.

His father Faunus; a Laurentian dame
His mother, fair Marica was her name. Dryd.

Who would not repeat that bliss,
And frequent sight of such a dame
Buy with the hazard of his fame? Waller.

3. Mistress of a low family.

They killed the poor cock; for, say they, if it were not for his waking our dame, she would not wake us. L'Estrange.

4. Woman in general.

We've willing dames enough; there cannot be
That vulture in you, to devour so many
As will to greatness dedicate themselves. Shak.

DAMES-VIOLET. n. s. A plant, called also queen's gillyflower. Miller.

To DAMN. v. a. [damno, Lat.]

1. To doom to eternal torments in a future state.

It is most necessary, that the church, by doctrine and decree, do damn and send to hell for ever those facts and opinions. Bacon.

2. To procure or cause to be eternally condemned.

That which he continues ignorant of, having done the utmost lying in his power that he might not be ignorant of it, shall not damn him. South's Sermons.

3. To condemn.

His own impartial thought
Will damn, and conscience will record the fault. Dryden.

4. To hoot or hiss any publick performance; to explode.

They damn themselves, nor will my muse descend
To clap with such who fools and knaves commend. Dryden.

For the great dons of wit,
Phœbus gives them full privilege alone
To damn all others, and cry up their own. Dryd.

You are so good a critick, that it is the greatest happiness of the modern poets that you do not hear their works; and, next, that you are not so arrant a critick as to damn them, like the rest, without hearing. Pope.

DA'MNABLE. adj. [from damn.]

1. Deserving damnation; justly doomed to never-ending punishment.

It gives him occasion of labouring with greater earnestness elsewhere, to entangle unwary minds with the snares of his damnable opinion. Hooker.

He's a creature unprepar'd, unmeet for death;
And to transport him in the mind he is
Were damnable. Shakesp. Meas for Meas.

As he does not reckon every schism of a damnable nature, so he is far from closing with the new opinion of those who make it no crime. Swift.

2. It is sometimes indecently used in a low and ludicrous sense; odious; pernicious.

O thou damnable fellow! did not I pluck thee by the nose for thy speeches? Shak. Meas. for Meas.

DA'MNABLY. adv. [from damnable.]

1. In such a manner as to incur eternal punishment; so as to be excluded from mercy.

We will propose the question, whether those who hold the fundamentals of faith may deny Christ damnably, in respect of those consequences that arise from them? South's Sermons.

2. It is indecently used in a ludicrous sense; odiously; hatefully.

The more sweets they bestowed upon them, the more damnably their conserves stunk. Dennis.

DAMNA'TION. n. s. [from damn.] Exclusion from divine mercy; condemnation to eternal punishment.

He that hath been affrighted with the fears of hell, or remembers how often he hath been spared from an horrible damnation, will not be ready to strangle his brother for a trifle.
Taylor's Worthy Communicant.

Now mince the sin,
And mollify damnation with a phrase:
Say you consented not to Sancho's death,
But barely not forbade it. Dryden.

DA'MNATORY. adj. [from damnatorius.] Containing a sentence of condemnation.

DA'MNED. part. adj. [from damn.] Hateful; detestable; abhorred; abominable.

Not in the legions
Of horrid hell can come a devil more damn'd
In evils to top Macbeth. Shakesp. Macbeth.

Let not the royal bed of Denmark be
A couch for luxury and damned incest.
Shakesp. Hamlet.

But, oh! what damned minutes tells he ov'r,
Who doats, yet doubts; suspects, yet strongly loves. Shakesp.

Dare not
To brand the spotless virtue of my prince
With falsehoods of most base and damn'd contrivance. Rowe.

DAMNIFIC. adj. [from damnify.] Procuring loss; mischievous.

To DA'MNIFY. v. a. [from damnifico, Lat.]

1. To endamage; to injure; to cause loss to any.

He, who has suffered the damage, has a right to demand in his own name, and he alone can remit, satisfaction: the damnified person has the power of appropriating the goods or service of the offender, by right of self-preservation. Locke.

2. To hurt; to impair.

When now he saw himself so freshly rear,
As if late fight had nought him damnified,
He was dismay'd, and 'gan his fate to fear.
Fairy Queen.

DA'MNINGNESS. n. s. [from damning.] Tendency to procure damnation.

He may vow never to return to those sins which he hath had such experience of, for the emptiness and damningness of them, and so think himself a complete penitent. Hammond.

DAMP. adj. [dampe, Dut.]

1. Moist; inclining to wet; not completely dry; foggy.

She said no more: the trembling Trojans hear,
O'erspread with a damp sweat and holy fear.
Dryden.

2. Dejected; sunk; depressed.

All these and more came flocking, but with looks
Downcast and damp: yet such wherein appear'd
Obscure some glimpse of joy. Milton.

DAMP. n. s.

1. Fog; moist air; moisture.

Night; not now, as ere man fell,
Wholesom and cool, and mild; but with black air
Accompanied, with damps and dreadful gloom.
Milton.

A rift there was, which from the mountain's height
Convey'd a glimmering and malignant light;
A breathing-place to draw the damps away,
A twilight of an intercepted day. Dryden.

2. A noxious vapour exhaled from the earth

The heat of the sun, in the hotter seasons, penetrating the exterior parts of the earth, excites those mineral exhalations in subterraneous caverns, which are called damps: these seldom happen but in the summer-time; when, the hotter the weather is, the more frequent are the damps.
Woodward.

3. Dejection; depression of spirit; cloud of the mind.

Adam, by this from the cold sudden damp
Recov'ring, and his scatter'd spirits return'd,
To Michael thus his humble words address'd.
Milton.

His name struck every where so great a damp,
As Archimedes through the Roman camp. Rose.

Ev'n now, while thus I stand blest in thy presence,
A secret damp of grief comes o'er my thoughts.
Addison.

An eternal state he knows and confesses that he has made no provision for, that he is undone for ever: a prospect enough to cast a damp over his sprightliest hours. Rogers.

This commendable resentment against me, strikes a damp upon that spirit in all ranks and corporations of men. Swift

To DAMP. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To wet; to moisten; to make humid.

2. To depress; to deject; to chill; to dull.

The very loss of one pleasure is enough to damp the relish of another. L'Estrange.

Dread of death hangs over the mere natural man, and, like the hand-writing on the wall, damps all his jollity. Atterbury.

It would be enough to damp their warmth in such pursuits, if they could once reflect, that in such course they will be sure to run upon the very rock they mean to avoid. Swift.

3. To weaken; to abate; to hebetate; to discourage.

A soft body dampeth the sound much more than a hard. Bacon.

4. To hebetate; to abate motion; to discourage; to dull.

Usury dulls and damps all industries, improvements, and new inventions, wherein money would be stirring, if it were not for this slug. Bacon.

Unless an age too late, or cold
Climate, or years, damp my intended wing
Depress'd. Milton.

DA'MPISHNESS. n. s. [from damp.] Tendency to wetness; fogginess; moisture.

It has been used by some with great success to make their walls thick; and to put a lay of chalk between the bricks, to take away all dampishness. Bacon.

DA'MPNESS. n. s. [from damp.] Moisture; fogginess.

Nor need they fear the dampness of the sky
Should flag their wings, and hinder them to fly;
'Twas only water thrown on sails too dry. Dryden.

By stacks they often have very great loss, by the dampness of the ground, which rots and spoils it. Mortimer.

DA'MPY. adj. [from damp.] Dejected; gloomy; sorrowful.

The lords did dispel dampy thoughts, which the remembrance of his uncle might raise, by applying him with exercises and disports. Hayward.

DA'MSEL. n. s. [damoiselle, Fr.]

1. A young gentlewoman; a young woman of distinction: now only used in verse.

Kneeling, I my servant's smiles implore,
And one mad damsel dares dispute my pow'r.
Prior.

2. An attendant of the better rank.

With her train of damsels she was gone
In shady walks, the scorching heat to shun.
Dryden.

3. A wench; a country lass.

The clowns are whoremasters, and the damsels with child. Gay.

DA'MSON. n. s. [corruptly from damascene.] A small black plum. See DAMASCENE.

My wife desir'd some damsons,
And made me climb with danger of my life. Shak.

DAN. n. s. [from dominus, as now don in Spain, and donna, Ital. from domina.] The old term of honour for men, as we now say Master. I know not that it was ever used in prose, and imagine it to have been rather of ludicrous import.

Don Chaucer well of English undefiled.
Douglass.

This whimpled, whining, purblind, wayward boy,
This signor Junio's giant dwarf, dan Cupid. Shak.

Dick, if this story pleaseth thee,
Pray thank dan Pope, who told it me.
Prior's Alma.

To DANCE. v. a. [danser, Fr. dançar, Span and some think from tanzar, Arab. a dance; as Junius, who loves to derive from Greek, thinks, from δονεω.] To move in measure; to move with steps correspondent to the sound of instruments.

What say you to young Mr. Fenton? He capers, he dances, he has eyes of youth, he writes verses. Shakesp.

To DANCE Attendance. v. n. To wait with simpleness and obsequiousness.

Men are sooner weary to dance attendance at the gates of foreign lords, than to tarry the good leisure of their own magistrates. Raleigh's Essays.

It upbraids you,
To let your father's friend, for three long months,
Thus dance attendance for a word of audience,
Dryden.

To DANCE. v. a. To make to dance; to put into a lively motion.

Thy grandsire lov'd thee well;
Many a time he danc'd thee on his knee. Shakesp.

That I see thee here,
Thou noble thing! more dances my rapt' heart,
Than when I first my wedded mistress saw
Bestride my threshold. Shakesp. Coriolanus.

In pestilences, the malignity of the infecting vapour danceth the principal spirits. Bacon.

DANCE. n. s. [from the verb.] A motion of one or many in concert, regulated by musick.

Our dance of custom, round about the oak of Herne the Hunter. Shakesp. M. Wives of Windsor.

The honourablest part of talk is to give the occasion, and again to moderate and pass to somewhat else; for then a man leads the dance. Bacon.

But you perhaps expect a modish feast,
With am'rous songs and wanton dances grac'd.
Dryden.

DA'NCER. n. s. [from dance.] One that practises the art of dancing.

He at Philippi kept
His sword e'en like a dancer, while I strook
The lean and wrinkled Cassius. Shakesp.

Musicians and dancers! take some truce
With these your pleasing labours; for great use
As much weariness as perfection brings. Donne.

The earl was so far from being a good dancer, that he was no graceful goer. Wotton.

It is a usual practice for our funambulours, or dancers on the rope, to attempt somewhat like to flying. Wilkins.

He, perfect dancer! climbs the rope,
And balances your fear and hope. Prior.

Nature, I thought, perform'd too mean a part,
Forming her movements to the rules of art;
And, vex'd, I found that the musician's hand
Had o'er the dancer's mind too great command.
Prior.

DA'NCINGMASTER. n. s. [dance and master.] One who teaches the art of dancing.

The apes were taught their apes tricks by a dancingmaster. L'Estrange.

The legs of a dancingmaster, and the fingers of a musician, fall, as it were, naturally, without thought or pains, into regular and admirable motions. Locke on Understanding.

DA'NCING-SCHOOL. n. s. [dancing and school.] The school where the art of dancing is taught.

They bid us to the English dancing-schools,
And teach lavoltas high, and swift courantos;
Saying our grace is only in our heels. Shakesp.

A certain Egyptian king endowed a dancing-school for the instruction of apes of quality. L'Estrange.

DANDE'LION. n. s. [dent de lion, Fr.] The name of a plant.

It agrees in all respects with the hawkweed, but only in its having a single naked stalk, with one flower upon the top. Miller.

For cowslips sweet, let dandelions spread:
For Blouzelinda, blithsome maid, is dead! Gay's Pastorals.

DA'NDIPRAT. n. s. [dandin, Fr.] A little follow; an urchin: a word used sometimes in fondness, sometimes in contempt.

To DA'NDLE. v. a. [dandelen, Dut.]

1. To shake a child on the knee, or in the hands, to please and quiet him.

Then shall ye suck, and shall be born upon her sides, and be dandled upon her knees. Isaiah.

Thy little brethren, which, like fairy sprights,
Oft skip into our chamber those sweet nights,
And kiss'd and dandled on thy father's knee,
Were brib'd next day to tell what they did see. Donne.

Courts are but superficial schools
To dandle fools. Bacon.

Sporting the lion ramp'd, and in his paw
Dandled the kid. Milton.

Motion occasions sleep, as we find by the common use of rocking froward children in cradles, or dandling them in their nurses arms. Tillotson.

2. To fondle; to treat like a child.

Their child shall be advanc'd,
And be received for the emperor's heir;
And let the emperor dandle him for his own. Shakesp.

They have put me in a silk gown, and a gaudy fool's cap; I am ashamed to be dandled thus, and cannot look in the glass without blushing, to see myself turned into such a little pretty master. Addison's Guardian.

3. To delay; to procrastinate; to protract by trifles; not in use.

Captains do so dandle their doings, and dally in the service, as if they would not have the enemy subdued. Spenser.

DA'NDLER. n. s. [from dandle.] He that dandles or fondles children.

DA'NDRUFF. n. s. [often written dondriff, from tan the itch, and bnop sordid, filthy.] Scabs in the head; scurf at the roots of the hair.

DA'NEWORT. n. s. A species of elder; called also dwarf-elder, or wallwort.

DA'NGER. n. s. [danger, Fr. of uncertain derivation. Skinner derives it from damnum, Menage from angaria, Minshew from δάνος death, to which Junius seems inclined.] Risque; hazard; peril.

They that sail on the sea, tell of the danger. Ecclus. xliii. 24.

Our craft is in danger to be set at nought. Acts, x. 27.

He hath writ this to feel my affection to your honour, and to no other pretence of danger. Shakesp.

More danger now from man alone we find,
Than from the rocks, the billows, and the wind. Waller.

To DA'NGER. v. a. [from the noun.] To put in hazard; to endanger.

Pompey's son stands up
For the main soldier; whose quality going on,
The sides o' th' world may danger. Shakesp.

DA'NGERLESS. adj. [from danger.] Without hazard; without risque; exempt from danger.

He shewed no less magnanimity in dangerless despising, than others in dangerous affecting, the multiplying of kingdoms. Sidney.

DA'NGEROUS. adj. [from danger.] Hazardous; perilous; full of danger.

A man of an ill tongue is dangerous in his city. Ecclus. ix.

All men counsel me to take away thy life, likely to bring forth nothing but dangerous and wicked effects. Sidney.

Already we have conquer'd half the war,
And the less dangerous part is left behind. Dryden.

DA'NGEROUSLY. adv. [from dangerous.] Hazardously; perilously; with danger.

But for your son, believe it, oh believe it,
Most dangerously you have with him prevail'd,
If not most mortal to him. Shakesp. Coriolanus.

A sort of naughty persons
Have practis'd dangerously against your state,
Dealing with witches and with conjurors. Shakesp.

It is just with God to permit those, which think they stand so surely, to fall most dangerously. Hammond on Fundamentals.

Plutarch says, Telesilla, a noble lady, being dangerously sick, was advised to apply her mind to poetry. Peacham.

If it were so, which but to think were pride,
My constant love would dangerously be tried. Dryden.

DA'NGEROUSNESS. n. s. [from dangerous.] Danger; hazard; peril.

I shall not need to mind you of judging of the dangerousness of diseases, by the mildness of the part affected. Boyle.

To DA'NGLE. v. n. [from hang, according to Skinner; as, hang, hangle, dangle.] To hang loose and quivering.

Go, bind thou up yon dangling apricocks. Shak.

He'd rather on a gibbit dangle,
Than miss his dear delight to wrangle, Hudibras.

Codrus had but one bed; so short, to boot,
That his short wife's short legs hung dangling out. Dryden.

With dangling hands he strokes th' imperial robe.
And with a cuckold's air commands the globe. Smith.

But have you not with thought beheld
The sword hang dangling o'er the shield? Prior.

2. To hang upon any one; to be an humble, useless, harmless follower.

The presbyterians, and other fanaticks that dangle after them, are well inclined to pull down the present establishment. Swift.

DA'NGLER. n. s. [from dangle.] A man that hangs about women only to waste time.

A dangler is of neither sex. Ralph.

DANK. adj. [from tuncken, German. Skinner.] Damp; humid; moist; wet.

He her the maiden sleeping found
On the dank and dirty ground. Shakesp.

Yet oft they quit
The dank, and rising on stiff pinions tour
The mid aereal sky. Milton.

Through each thicket, dank or dry,
Like a black mist, low creeping, he held on
His midnight search. Milton.

Now that the fields are dank, and ways are mire,
Where shall we sometimes meet, and by the fire
Help waste a sullen day? Milton.

By the rushy-fringed bank,
Where grows the willow and the osier dank,
My sliding chariot stays. Milton.

Me, in my vow'd
Picture, the sacred wall declares t' have hung
My dank and drooping weeds
To the stern god of sea. Milton.

To wash the skins of beasts and fowls herewith, would keep them from growing dank in moist weather. Grew.

DA'NKISH. adj. Somewhat dank.

They bound me, bore me thence,
And in a dark and dankish vault at home
There left me. Shakesp.

To DAP. v. n. [corrupted from dip.] To let fall gently into the water: a word, I believe, only used by anglers.

I have taught him how to catch a chub, by dapping with a grasshopper. Walton.

DAPA'TICAL. adj. [from dapaticus, Lat.] Sumptuous in cheer. Bailey.

DA'PPER. adj. [dapper, Dut.] Little and active; lively without bulk. It is usually spoken in contempt.

And on the tawny sands and shelves,
Trip the pert fairies and the dapper elves. Milton.

A pert dapper spark of a magpie fancied the birds would never be governed till himself should sit at the helm. L'Estrange.

DA'PPERLING. n. s. [from dapper.] A dwarf; a dandiprat. Ainsworth.

DA'PPLE. adj. [from apple; as pommelé.] Marked with various colours; variegated; streaked; imbricated; it is used chiefly of animals.

My country neighbours do not find it impossible to think of a fame horse, till they have run over all beings that are, and then pitch on dapple. Locke.

To DA'PPLE. v. a. [from the adjective.] To streak; to vary; to diversify with colours

But under him a grey steed did he wield,
Whose sides with dappled circles were endight. Spenser.

The gentle day
Dapples the drowsy east with spots of grey. Shakesp.

Horses that are dappled turn white; and old squirrels turn grisly. Bacon.

The lark begins his flight,
From his watch-tower in the skies,
Till the dappled dawn doth rise. Milton

The dappled pink, and blushing rose,
Deck my charming Chloe's hair. Prior.

The gods, to curse Pamela with her pray'rs,
Gave the gilt coach and dappled Flanders mares. Pope.

DAR. } n. s. A fish found in the Severn.
DART. } Bailey. Dart is the same with Dace.

To DARE. v. n. pret. I durst; the preterite I dared belongs to the active dare; part. I have dared. [beapran, Sax. deren, Dut.] To have courage for any purpose: not to be afraid; to adventure, to be adventurous.

Darest thou be as good as thy word now?——
Why, Hal, thou knowest, as thou art but a man,
I dare; but as thou art a prince, I fear thee. Shakesp.

I dare do all that may become a man;
Who dares do more, is none. Shakesp.

They are both hanged; and so would this be, if he durst steal any thing adventurously Shakesp.

Neither of them was of that temper as to dare any dangerous fact. Hayward.

The father bore it with undaunted soul,
Like one who durst his destiny controul. Dryden.

Deliberate and well-weighed courage knows both to be cautious and to dare, as occasion offers. Dryden.

We dare not build much upon such a notion or doctrine, till it be very fully examined. Watts.

To DARE. v. a. pret. I dared, not I durst. To challenge; to defy.

I never in my life
Did hear a challenge urg'd more modestly,
Unless a brother should a brother dare
To gentle exercise and proof of arms. Shakesp.

Here she stands:
Take but possession of her with a touch;
I dare thee but to breathe upon my love. Shakesp.

He had many days come half seas over; and sometimes passing further, came and lay at the mouth of the harbour, daring them to fight. Knolles.

Masters of the arts of policy thought that they might even defy and dare Providence to the face. South.

All cold, but in her breast, I will despise;
And dare all heat but that in Celia's eyes. Roscommon.

Time! I dare thee to discover
Such a youth, and such a lover. Dryden.

Presumptuous wretch! with mortal art to dare
Immortal power, and brave the thunderer. Granville.

To DARE Larks. To catch them by means of a looking-glass, or by keeping a bird of prey hovering aloft, which keeps them in a maze till caught; to amaze.

Shrimps are dipped up in shallow water with little round nets, not much unlike that which is used for daring larks. Carew.

As larks lie dar'd to shun the hobby's flight. Dryden.

DARE. n. s. [from the verb.] Defiance; challenge.

Sextus Pompeius
Hath given the dare to Cæsar, and commands
The empire of the sea. Shakesp.

DARE. n. s. A small fish, the same with dace. Leuciscus.

DARE'FUL. adj. [dare and full.] Full of defiance; not in use.

We might have met them dareful, beard to beard,
And beat them backward home. Shakesp.

DA'RING. adj. [from dare.] Bold; adventurous; fearless; courageous; intrepid; brave; stout.

The last Georgick has many metaphors, but not so daring as this; for human passions may be more naturally ascribed to a bee than to an inanimate plant. Addison.

The song too daring, and the theme too great. Prior.

Grieve not, O daring prince, that noble heart. Pope.

DA'RINGLY. adv. [from daring.] Boldly; courageously; fearlessly; impudently; outrageously.

Some of the great principles of religion are every day openly and daringly attacked from the press. Atterbury.

Your brother, fir'd with his success,
Too daringly upon the foe did press. Halifax.

DA'RINGNESS. n. s. [from daring.] Boldness.

DARK. adj. [deorc, Sax.]

1. Not light; wanting light.

Fleance, his son, who keeps him company,
Must embrace the fate of that dark hour. Shakesp.

While we converse with her, we mark
No want of day, nor think it dark. Waller.

2. Not of a showy or vivid colour.

If the plague be somewhat dark, and the plague spread not in the skin, the priest shall pronounce him clean. Leviticus.

In Muscovy the generality of the people are more inclined to have dark coloured hair than flaxen. Boyle.

3. Blind; without the enjoyment of light.

Thou wretched daughter of a dark old man,
Conduct my weary steps. Dryden and Lee's Oedipus

4. Opake; not transparent: as, lead is a dark body.

5. Obscure; not perspicuous.

What may seem dark at the first, will afterwards be found more plain. Hooker.

Mean time we shall express our darker purpose. Shakesp.

6. Not enlightened by knowledge; ignorant.

The age, wherein he liv'd, was dark; but he Could not want sight, who taught the world to see. Denham.

7. Gloomy; not cheerful.

All men of dark tempers, according to their degree of melancholy or enthusiasm, may find convents fitted to their humours. Addison on Italy.

DARK. n. s.

1. Darkness; obscurity; want of light.

Come, thick night,
And pall thee in the dunnest smoke of hell,
That my keen knife see not the wound it makes;
Nor heav'n peep through the blanket of the dark,
To cry, hold! hold! Shakesp. Macbeth.

Cloud and ever-during dark
Surrounds me! from the cheerful ways of men
Cut off. Milton.

Whereas seeing requires light, and a free medium, and a right line to the objects, we can hear in the dark immur'd, and by curve lines. Holder.

2. Obscurity; condition of one unknown.

All he says of himself is, that he is an obscure person; one, I suppose he means, that is in the dark. Atterbury.

3. Want of knowledge.

Till we ourselves perceive by our own understandings, we are as much in the dark, and as void of knowledge, as before. Locke.

To DARK. v. a. [from the noun.] To darken; to obscure; obsolete.

Fair when that cloud of pride, which oft doth dark
Her goodly light, with smiles she drives away. Spenser.

To DA'RKEN. v. a. [from dark.]

1. To make dark; to deprive of light.

Black with surrounding forests then it stood,
That hung above, and darken'd all the flood. Addison.

Whether the darken'd room to muse invite,
Or whiten'd wall provoke the skew'r to write. Pope.

2. To cloud; to perplex.

Such was his wisdom, that his confidence did seldom darken his foresight, especially in things near hand. Bacon.

3. To foul; to sully.

The lusts and passions of men do sully and darken their minds, even by a natural influence. Tillotson.

To DA'RKEN. v. n. To grow dark.

DA'RKLING. [A participle, as it seems, from darke, which yet I have never found; or perhaps a kind of diminutive from dark, as young, youngling.] Being in the dark; being without light: a word merely poetical.

O, wilt thou darkling leave me? do not so. Shakesp.

Darkling stands
The varying shore o' th' world. Shakesp.

The wakeful bird
Sings darkling, and, in shadiest covert hid,
Tunes her nocturnal note. Milton.

Darkling they mourn their fate, whom Circe's pow'r,
With words and wicked herbs, from human kind
Had alter'd, and in brutal shapes confin'd. Dryd.

DARKLY. adv. [from dark.] In a situation void of light; obscurely; blindly; gloomily; uncertainly.

For well you know, and can record alone,
What fame to future times conveys but darkly down. Dryden.

DA'RKNESS. n. s. [from dark.]

1. Absence of light.

Darkness was upon the face of the deep. Genesis.

I go whence I shall not return, even to the land of darkness and the shadow of death. Job.

2. Opakeness; want of transparency.

3. Obscurity; want of perspicuity, difficultness to the understanding.

4. Infernal gloom; wickedness.

The instruments of darkness tell us truths;
Win us with honest trifles, to betray us
In deepest consequence. Shakesp.

5. State of being intellectually clouded; ignorance; uncertainty.

All the light truth has, or can have, is from the clearness and validity of those proofs upon which it is received; to talk of any other light in the understanding, is to put ourselves in the dark, or in the power of the prince of darkness. Locke.

6. The empire of Satan, or the Devil.

Who hath delivered us from the power of darkness, and translated us into the kingdom of his dear Son. Colossians.

DA'RKSOME. adj. [from dark.] Gloomy; obscure; not well enlightened; not luminous

He brought him thro' a darksome narrow pass
To a broad gate. Spenser.

And her fair eyes, like stars that dimmed were
With darksome cloud, now shew their goodly beams. Spenser.

You must not look to have an image in any thing lightsome; for even a face in iron, red-hot, will not be seen, the light confounding the small differences of lightsome and darksome, which shew the figure. Bacon.

A darksome cloud of locusts, swarming down,
Must eat, and on the ground leave nothing green. Milton.

He, here with us to be,
Forsook the courts of everlasting day,
And chose with us a darksome house of mortal clay. Milton.

Mistaken blessing, which old age they call,
'Tis a long, nasty, darksome hospital. Dryden.

The darksome pines, that o'er yon rocks reclin'd,
Wave high, and murmur to the hollow wind. Pope.

DA'RLING. adj. [deorling, Sax. diminutive of dear.] Favourite; dear; beloved; regarded with great kindness and tenderness.

'Tis not for a generous prince to countenance oppression and injustice, even in his most darling favourites. L'Estrange.

Have a care lest some belov'd notion, or some darling science, too far prevail over your mind. Watts.

DA'RLING. n. s. A favourite; one much beloved.

Young Ferdinand they suppose is drown'd,
And his and my lov'd darling. Shakesp.

In Thames, the ocean's darling, England's pride,
The pleasing emblem of his reign does glide. Halifax.

She became the darling of the princess. Addison.

To DARN. v. a. [of uncertain original.] To mend holes by imitating the texture of the stuff.

Will she thy linen wash, or hosen darn? Gay.

He spent every day ten hours in his closet, in darning his stockings, which he performed to admiration. Swift.

DA'RNEL. n. s. [lolium.] A weed growing in the fields.

He was met ev'n now
Crown'd with rank fumiter and furrow-weeds,
Darnel, and all the idle weeds that grow
In our sustaining corn. Shakesp.
Want ye corn for bread!
'Twas full of darnel; do you like the taste. Shak.
No fruitful crop the sickly fields return;
But oats and darnel choak the rising corn. Dryd.

To DA'RRAIN. v. a. [This word is by Junius referred to dare: it seems to me more probably deducible from arranger la battaille]

1. To prepare for battle; to range troops for battle.

The town-boys parted in twain, the one side calling themselves Pompeians the other Cæsarians; and then darraining a kind of battle, but without arms, the Cæsarians got the over hand. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

Comes Warwick, backing of the duke of York;
Darrain your battle; for they are at hand. Shake.

2. To apply to the fight; of single combatants.

Therewith they 'gan to hurleu greedily,
Redoubted battle ready to darraine. Spenser.

DART. n. s. [dard, Fr.]

1. A missile weapon thrown by the hand; a small lance.

Here one is wounded or slain with a piece of a rock or flint, there another with a dart, arrow, or lance. Peacham.

O'erwhelm'd with darts, which from afar they fling,
The weapons round his hollow temples ring. Dryden.

2. [In poetry.] Any missile weapon.

To DART. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To throw offensively.

He wets his tusks, and turns, and dares the war;
Th' invaders dart their jav'lins from afar. Dryden.

2. To throw; to emit; as, the sun darts his beams on the earth.

Pan came, and ask'd what magick caus'd my smart;
Or what ill eyes malignant glances dart. Pope.

To DART. v. n.

1. To fly as a dart.

2. To let fly with hostile intention.

Now, darting Parthia, art thou struck. Shakesp.

To DASH. v. a. [The etymology of this word, in any of its senses, is very doubtful.]

1. To throw or strike any thing suddenly against something.

If you dash a stone against a stone in the bottom of the water, it maketh a sound. Bacon.

A man that cuts himself, and tears his own flesh, and dashes his head against the stones, does not act so unreasonably as the wicked man. Tillotson.

2. To break by collision.

They that stand high have many blasts to shake them;
And, if they fall, they dash themselves to pieces. Shakesp.

David's throne shall then be like a tree,
Spreading and overshad'wing all the earth;
Or as a stone, that shall to pieces dash
All monarchies besides throughout the world. Milton.

3. To throw water in flashes.

Dashing water on them may prove the best remedy. Mortimer.

Middling his head, and prone to earth his view,
With ears and chest that dash the morning dew. Tickel.

4. To baspatter; to besprinkle.

This tempest,
Dashing the garment of this peace, aboded
The sudden breach on't. Shakesp. Henry VIII.

5. To agitate any liquid, so as to make the furface fly off.

At once the blushing oars and brasen prow
Dash up the sandy waves, and ope the depths below. Dryden.

6. To mingle; to adulterate; to change by some worse admixture.

Whacum, bred to dash and draw,
Not wine, but more unwholesome law. Hudibras.

I take care to dash the character with such particular circumstances, as may prevent ill-natured applications. Addison.

Several revealed truths are dashed and adulterated with a mixture of fables and human inventions. Spectator, No. 580.

7. To form or sketch in haste; carelessly.

Never was dash'd out, at one lucky hit,
A fool so just a copy of a wit. Pope.

8. To obliterate; to blot; to cross out.

1. To smear with something adhesive.

She took for him an ark of bullrushes, and daubed it with slime and with pitch. Exodus.

2. To paint coarsely.

Hasty daubing will but spoil the picture, and make it so unnatural as must want false light to set it off. Otway.

They snatched out of his hands a lame imperfect piece, rudely daubed over with too little reflection. Dryden.

If a picture is daubed with many bright and glaring colours, the vulgar admire it is an excellent piece. Watts.

3. To cover with something specious or gross, something that disguises what it lies upon.

So smooth he daub'd his vice with shew of virtue,
He liv'd from all attainder of suspect. Shakesp.

4. To lay on any thing gaudily or ostentatiously.

Since princes will have such things, it is better they should be graced with elegancy, than daubed with cost. Bacon.

Let him be daub'd with lace, live high, and whore;
Sometimes be lousy, but be never poor. Dryden.

5. To flatter grossly.

Let every one, therefore, attend the sentence of his conscience; for, he may be sure, it will not daub nor flatter. South.

To DAUB v. n. To play the hypocrite: this sense is not in use.

I cannot daub it further;
And yet I must. Shakesp.

DA'UBER. n. s. [from daub.]

1. One that daubs.
2. A course low painter.

What they called his picture, had been drawn at length by the daubers of almost all nations, and still unlike him. Dryden.

Parts of different species jumbled together, according to the mad imagination of the dauber, to cause laughter. Dryden.

A sign-post dauber would disdain to paint
The one-eyed hero on his elephant. Dryden.

The treacherous tapster, Thomas,
Hangs a new angel two doors from us,
As fine as daubers hands can make it. Swift.

3. A low flatterer.

DA'UBRY. n. s. [from daub.] An old word for any thing artful.

She works by charms, by spells; and such daubry as this is beyond our element. Shakesp.

DA'UBY. adj. [from daub.] Viscous; glutinous; adhesive.

Not in vain th' industrious kind
With dauby wax and flow'rs the chinks have lin'd. Dryden.

—My leisure serves me, pensive daughter, now. Shakesp.

To DAUNT. v. a. [domter, Fr. domitare, Lat.] To discourage; to fright; to intimidate.

Fairfax, whose name in arms thro' Europe rings,
And fills all mouths with envy or with praise,
And all her jealous monarchswith amaze,
And rumours loud, which daunt remotest kings. Milton.

Where the rude ax, with heaved stroke,
Was never heard the nymphs to daunt,
Or fright them from their hallow'd haunt. Milton.

Some presences daunt and discourage us, when others raise us to a brisk assurance. Glanville.

DA'UNTLESS. adj. [from daunt.] Fearless; not dejected; not discouraged.

Grow great by your example, and put on
The dauntless spirit of resolution. Shakesp.

Dauntless he rose, and to the fight return'd:
With shame his glowing cheeks, his eyes with fury burn'd. Dryden's Virgil.

He, not by wants or woes oppress'd,
Stems the bold torrent with a dauntless breast. Dryd.

The utmost weight of affliction from ministerial power and popular hatred, were almost worth bearing, for the glory of such a dauntless conduct as he has shewn under it. Pope.

DA'UNTLESSNESS. n. s. [from dauntless.] Fearlessness.

DAW. n. s. [supposed by Skinner so named from his note; by Junius to be corrupted from dawl; the German tul, and dol in the Baravian dialect, having the same signification.] The name of a bird. Menedulu.

I will wear my heart upon my sleeve,
For daws to peck at Shakesp. Othello.

If death do quench us quite, we have great wrong,
That daws, and trees, and rocks should last so long,
When we must in an instant pass to nought. Davies.

The loud daw, his throat displaying, draws
The whole assembly of his fellow daws. Waller.

DAWK. n. s. A cant word among the workmen for a hollow, rupture, or incision, in their stuff.

Observe if any hollow or dawks be in the length. Moxon.

To DAWK. v. a. To mark with an incision.

Should they apply that side of the tool the edge lies on, the swift coming about of the work would, where a small irregularity of stuff should happen, jobb the edge into the stuff, and so dawk it. Moxon.

To DAWN. v. n. [supposed by the etymologists to have been originally to dayen, or advance towards day.]

1. To grow luminous; to begin to grow light.

I have been troubled in my sleep this night;
But dawning day new comfort hath inspir'd. Shak.

As it began to dawn, towards the first day of the week, came Mary Magdalene to see the sepulchre. Matthew.

All night I slept, oblivious of my pain;
Aurora dawn'd and Phœbus shin'd in vain. Pope.

2. To glimmer obscurely.

A Romanist, from the very first dawning of any notions in his understanding, hath this principle constantly inculcated, that he must believe as the church. Locke.

3. To begin, yet faintly; to give some promises of lustre or eminence.

While we behold such dauntless worth appear
In dawning youth, and souls so void of fear. Dryd.

Thy hand strikes out some free design,
Where life awakes and dawns at every line. Pope.

DAWN. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. The time between the first appearance of light and the sun's rise, reckoned from the time that the sun comes within eighteen degrees of the horizon.

Then on to-morrow's dawn your care employ
To search the land, but give this day to joy. Dryd.

2. Beginning; first rise.

These tender circumstances diffuse a dawn of serenity over the soul. Pope.

Such their guiltless passion was,
As in the dawn of time inform'd the heart
Of innocence and undissembling truth. Tillotson.

DAY. n. s. [ꝺæg, Sax.]

1. The time between the rising and setting of the sun, called the artificial day.

Why stand ye here all the day idle? Matthew.

Of night impatient, we demand the day;
The day arrives, then for the night we pray·
The night and day successive come and go,
Our lasting pains no interruption know. Blackmore.

Or object new
Casual discourse draws on, which intermits
Our day's work. Milton.

2. The time from noon to noon, or from midnight, to midnight called the natural day.

How many hours bring about the day,
How many days will finish up the year. Shakesp.

3. Light; sunshine.

Let us walk honestly, as in the day; not in rioting and drunkenness. Romans.

The west yet glimmers with some streaks of day:
Now spurs the lated traveller apace,
To gain the timely inn. Shakesp. Macbeth.

Around the fields did nimble lightning play,
Which offer'd us by fits, and snatch'd the day·
'Midst this was heard the shrill and tender cry
Of well-pleas'd ghosts, which in the storm did fly. Dryden.

Yet are we able only to survey
Dawnings of beams, and promises of day. Prior.

4. Any time specified and distinguished from other time; an age; the time. In this sense it is generally plural.

After him reigned Gutheline his heir,
The justest man and truest in his days. Fairy Q.

DEAD-RECKONING. n. s. [a sea term] That estimation or conjecture which the seamen make of the place where a ship is, by keeping an account of her way by the log, by knowing the course they have steered by the compass, and by rectifying all with allowance for drift or lee way; so that this reckoning is without any observation of the sun, moon, and stars, and is to be rectified as often as any good observation can be had.

DEAF. adj. [doof, Dut.]

1. Wanting the sense of hearing.

Come on my right hand, for this ear is deaf. Shakesp.

Infected minds
To their deaf pillows will discharge their secrets. Shakesp.

The chief design here intended is to instruct such as are deaf and dumb, and dumb only by consequence of their want of hearing. Holder.

If any sins afflict our life
With that prime ill, a talking wife,
Till death shall bring the kind relief,
We must be patient, or be deaf. Prior.

Thus you may still be young to me,
While I can better hear than see:
Oh ne'er may fortune shew her spite,
To make me deaf, and mend my sight. Swift.

2. It has to before the thing that ought to be heard.

I will be deaf to pleading and excuses;
Nor tears nor prayers shall purchase out abuses. Shakesp.

Oh, that men's ears should be,
To counsel deaf, but not to flattery! Shakesp.

Whilst virtue courts them; but, alas, in vain!
Fly from her kind embracing arms,
Deaf to her fondest call, blind to her greatest charms. Roscommon.

Not so, for once indulg'd, they sweep the main;
Deaf to the call, or, hearing, hear in vain. Dryd.

Hope, too long with vain delusion fed,
Deaf to the rumour of fallacious fame,
Gives to the roll of death his glorious name. Pope.

3. Deprived of the power of hearing.

Deaf with the noise, I took my hasty flight:
No mortal courage can support the fright. Dryd.

4. Obscurely heard.

Nor silence is within, nor voice express,
But a deaf noise of sounds that never cease;
Confus'd and chiding like the hollow roar
Of tides receding from th' insulted shore. Dryd.

I found such a deafness, that no declaration from the bishops could take place. King Charles.

DEAL. n. s. [deel, Dut.]

1. Part.

A great deal of that which had been, was now to be removed out of the church. Hooker.

2. Quantity; degree of more or less. It was fomerly joined with different words, to limit its meaning; as, some deal, in some degree, to some amount: we now either say, a great deal, or a deal without an adjective; but this is commonly, if not always, ludicrous or contemptuous.

When men's affections do frame their opinions, they are in defence of errour more earnest, a great deal, than, for the most part, sound believers in the maintenance of truth, apprehending according to the nature of that evidence which scripture yieldeth. Hooker.

There is, indeed, store of matters, fitter and better a great deal for teachers to spend time and labour in. Hooker.

To weep with them that weep, doth ease some deal;
But sorrow flouted at is double death. Shakesp.

What a deal of cold business doth a man mispend the better part of life in! In scattering compliments, and tendering visits. Ben Jonson.

The charge some deal thee haply honour may,
That noble Dudone had while here he lived.
Fairfax.

Possibly some never so much as doubted of the safety of their spiritual estate; and, if so, they have so much the more reason, a great deal, to doubt of it. South.

The author, who knew that such a design as this could not be carried on without a great deal of artifice and sophistry, has puzzled and perplexed his cause. Addison.

3. [From the verb to deal.] The art or practice of dealing cards.

How can the muse her aid impart,
Unskill'd in all the terms of art?
Or in harmonious numbers put
The deal, the shuffle, and the cut? Swift.

4. [deyl. Dut.] Fir-wood, or the wood of pines.

I have also found, that a piece of deal, far thicker than one would easily imagine, being purposely interposed betwixt my eye, placed in a room, and the clearer daylight, was not only somewhat transparent, but appeared quite through a lovely red. Boyle on Colours.

To DEAL. v. a. [deelen, Dut.]

1. To distribute; to dispose to different persons.

Deal thy bread to the hungry, and bring the poor that are cast out to thy house. Isaiah, lviii. 7.

This is to drive a wholesome trade, when all other petty merchants deal but for parcels
Decay of Piety.

They buy and sell, they deal and traffic. South.

With the fond maids in palmistry he deals,
They tell the secret which he first reveals. Prior.

2. To act between two persons; to intervene.

Sometimes he that deals between man and man, raiseth his own credit with both, by pretending greater interest than he hath in either. Bacon.

3. To behave well or ill in any transaction.

I doubt not, if he will deal clearly and impartially, but that he will acknowledge all this to be true. Tillotson.

4. To act in any manner.

Two deep enemies,
Foes to my rest, and my sweet sleep's disturbers,
Are they that I would have thee deal upon. Shak.

5. To deal by. To treat well or ill. This seems a vitious use.

Such an one deals not fairly by his own mind, nor conducts his own understanding aright Locke.

6. To deal in. To have to do with; to be engaged in; to practise.

Suiters are so distasted with delays and abuses, that plain-dealing, in denying to deal in suits at first, is grown not only honourable, but also gracious. Bacon.

The Scripture forbids even the countenancing a poor man in his cause; which is a popular way of preventing justice, that some men have dealt in, though without that success which they proposed to themselves. Atterbury.

Among authors, none draw upon themselves more displeasure than those who deal in political matters. Addison.

True logick is not that noisy thing that deals all in dispute, to which the former ages had debased it. Watts's Logick.

7. To deal with. To treat in any manner; to use well or ill.

Neither can the Irish, nor yet the English lords, think themselves wronged, nor hardly dealt with, to have that which is none of their own given to them. Spenser's Ireland.

Who then shall guide
His people? Who defend? Will they not deal
Worse with his followers, than with him they dealt? Milton.

If a man would have his conscience deal clearly with him, he must deal severely with that. South's Sermons.

God did not only exercise this providence towards his own people, but he dealt thus also with other nations. Tillotson.

But I will deal the more civilly with his two poems, because nothing ill is to be spoken of the dead. Dryden.

You wrote to me with the freedom of a friend, dealing plainly with me in the matter of my own trifles. Pope.

Reflect on the merits of the cause, as well as of the men, who have been thus dealt with by their country. Swift.

8. To deal with. To contend with.

If she hated me, I should know what passion to deal with. Sidney.

Gentlemen were commanded to remain in the country, to govern the people, easy to be dealt with whilst they stand in fear. Hayward.

Then you upbraid me; I am pleased to see
You 're not so perfect, but can fail like me:
I have no God to deal with. Dryden.

To DEAL'BATE. v. a. [dealbo, Lat.] To whiten; to bleach.

DEALBA'TION. n. s. [dealbatio, Lat.] The act of bleaching or whitening; rendering things white which were not so before; a word in little use.

I find it common with these small dealers in wit and learning, to give themselves a title from their first adventure. Swift.

2. A trader or trafficker.

Where fraud is permitted and connived at, the honest dealer is always undone, and the knave gets the advantage. Gulliver's Travels.

3. A person who deals the cards.

DE'ALING. n. s. [from deal.]

1. Practice; action.

Concerning the dealings of men, who administer government, and unto whom the execution of that law belongeth, they have their judge, who sitteth in heaven. Hooker.

What these are!
Whose own hard dealings teach them to suspect
The thoughts of others. Shakesp.

But this was neither one pope's fault, nor one prince's destiny: he must write a story of the empire, that means to tell of all their dealings in this kind. Raleigh.

2. Intercourse.

It were to be wished, that men would promote the happiness of one another, in all their private dealings, among those who lie within their influence. Addison.

3. Measure of treatment; mode in which one treats another.

DEAMBULA'TION. n. s. [deambulatio, Lat.] The act of walking abroad.

DEA'MBULATORY. adj. [deambul, Lat.] Relating to the practice of walking abroad.

DEAN. n. s. [decanus, Lat. doyen Fr.]

From the Greek word δέκα; in English, ten, because he was anciently set over ten canons or prebendaries at least in some cathedral church. Ayliffe's Parergon.

As there are two foundations of cathedral churches in England, the old and the new (the new are those which Henry VIII. upon suppression of abbeys transformed from abbot or prior, and convent, to dean and chapter) so there are two means of creating these deans; for those of the old foundation are brought to their dignity much like bishops, the king first sending out his conge d'elire to the chapter, the chapter then chusing and the bishop confirming them, and giving his mandate to instal them. Those of the new foundation are, by a shorter course, installed by virtue of the king's letters patent, without either election or confirmation.

This word is also applied to divers, that are chief of certain peculiar churches or chapels; as the dean of the king's chapel, the dean of the Arches, the dean of St. George's chapel at Windsor, and the dean of Bocking in Essex. Cowell.

The dean and canons, or prebends, of cathedral churches, were of great use in the church; they were not only to be of counsel with the bishop for his revenue, but chiefly for government in causes ecclesiastical. Use your best means to prefer such to those places who are fit for that purpose. Bacon.

DE'ANERY. n. s. [from dean.]

1. The office of a dean.

He could no longer keep the deanery of the chapel-royal. Clarendon.

To pass, for succour from the scorching ray,
They heard a rueful voice, that dearnly cried
With piercing shrieks. Spenser.

DEARTH. n. s. [from dear.]

1. Scarcity which makes food dear.
In times of dearth, it drained much coin out of the kingdom, to furnish us with corn from foreign parts. Bacon.
There have been terrible years dearths of corn, and every place is strewed with beggars; but dearths are common in better climates, and our evils here lie much deeper. Swift.

2. Want; need; famine.
Pity the dearth that I have pined in,
By longing for that food so long a time. Shakesp.
Of every tree that in the garden grows,
Eat freely with glad heart; fear here no dearth.
Milton.

3. Barrenness; sterility.

As much as you raise silver, you debase gold, for they are in the condition of two things put in opposite scales; as much as the one rises, the other falls. Locke.

2. To make mean; to sink into meanness; to make despicable; to degrade.

It is a kind of taking God's name in vain, to debase religion with such frivolous disputes. Hooker.

A man of large possessions has not leisure to consider of every slight expence, and will not debase himself to the management of every trifle. Dryden.

Restraining others, yet himself not free;
Made impotent by pow'r, debas'd by dignity. Dryd.

3. To sink; to vitiate with meanness.

He ought to be careful of not letting his subject debase his style, and betray him into a meanness of expression. Addison.

Hunting after arguments to make good one side of a question, and wholly to refuse those which favour the other, is so far from giving truth its due value, that it wholly debases it. Locke.

4. To adulterate; to lessen in value by base admixtures.

He reformed the coin, which was much adulterated and debased in the times and troubles of king Stephen. Hale.

Words so debas'd and hard, no stone
Was hard enough to touch them on. Hudibras.

DEBA'SEMENT. n. s. [from debase.] The act of debasing or degrading; degradation.

It is a wretched debasement of that sprightly faculty, the tongue, thus to be made the interpreter to a goat or boar. Government of the Tongue.

DEBA'SER. n. s. [from debase.] He that debases; he that adulterates; he that degrades another; he that sinks the value of things, or destroys the dignity of persons.

DEBA'TABLE. adj. [from debate.] Disputable: that which is, or may be, subject to controversy.

The French requested, that the debatable ground, and the Scottish hostages, might be restored to the Scots. Hayward.

DEBATE. n. s. [debat, Fr.]

1. A personal dispute; a controversy.

A way that men ordinarily use, to force others to submit to their judgments, and receive their opinion in debate, is to require the adversary to admit what they alledge as a proof, or to assign a better. Locke.

It is to diffuse a light over the understanding, in our enquiries after truth, and not to furnish the tongue with debate and controversy. Watts's Logick.

2. A quarrel; a contest: it is not now used of hostile contest.

Now, lords, if heav'n doth give successful end
To this debate that bleedeth at our doors,
We will our youth lead on to higher fields,
And draw no swords but what are sanctified. Shak.

'Tis thine to ruin realms, o'erturn a state;
Betwixt the dearest friends to raise debate. Dryden.

To* DEBA'TE. v. a. [debatre, Fr.] To controvert; to dispute; to contest.

Debate thy cause with thy neighbour himself, and discover not a secret to another. Proverbs xxv. 9.

He could not debate any thing without some commotion, even when the argument was not of moment. Clarendon.

To* DEBA'UCH. v. a. [desbaucher, Fr. debacchari, Lat.]

1. To corrupt; to vitiate.

A man must have got his conscience thoroughly debauched and hardened, before he can arrive to the height of sin. South.

This it is to counsel things that are unjust; first, to debauch a king to break his laws, and then to seek protection. Dryden's Spanish Friar.

2. To corrupt with lewdness.

Here do you keep a hundred knights and squires,
Men so disorder'd, so debauch'd, and bold,
That this our court, infected with their manners,
Shews like a riotous inn. Shakesp. King Lear.

3. To corrupt by intemperance.

No man's reason did ever dictate to him, that it is reasonable for him to debauch himself by intemperance and brutish sensuality. Tillotson.

DEBA'UCH. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. A fit of intemperance.

He will for some time contain himself within the bounds of sobriety; till within a little while he recovers his former debauch, and is well again, and then his appetite returns. Calamy.

2. Luxury; excess; lewdness.

The first physicians by debauch were made;
Excess began, and sloth sustains, the trade. Dryd.

DEBAUCHE'E. n. s. [from desbauché, Fr.] A lecher; a drunkard; a man given to intemperance.

Could we but prevail with the greatest debauchees among us to change their lives, we should find it no very hard matter to change their judgments. South

DEBAUCHER. n. s. [from debauch.] One who seduces others to intemperance or lewdness; a corrupter.

DEBA'UCHERY. n. s. [from debauch.] The practice of excess; intemperance; lewdness.

Oppose vices by their contrary virtues; hypocrisy by sober piety, and debauchery by temperance. Spratt.

These magistrates, instead of lessening enormities, occasion just twice as much debauchery as there would be without them. Swift.

DEBAU'CHMENT. n. s. [from debauch.] The act of debauching or vitiating; corruption.

They told them ancient stories of the ravishment of chaste maidens, or the debauchment of nations, or the extreme poverty of learned persons Taylor's Rule of Living Holy.

To* DEBE'L. } v. a. [debello, Lat.]
To* DEBE'LLATE. } To conquer; to overcome in war: not now in use.

It doth notably set forth the consent of all nations and ages, in the approbation of the extirpating and debellating of giants, monsters, and foreign tyrants, not only as lawful, but as meritorious even of divine honour. Bacon's Holy War.

Him long of old
Thou didst debel, and down from heaven cast
With all his army. Milton.

DEBELLA'TION. n. s. [from debellatio, Lat.] The act of conquering in war.

DEBE'NTURE. n. s. [debentur, Lat. from debeo.] A writ or note, by which a debt is claimed.

You modern wits, should each man bring his claim,
Have desperate debentures on your fame;
And little would be left you, I'm afraid,
If all your debts to Greece and Rome were paid Swift

DE'BILE adj. [debilis, Lat.] Weak; feeble; languid; faint; without strength; imbecile; impotent.

I have not wash'd my nose that bled,
Or foil'd some debile wretch, which without note
There's many else have done. Shakesp.

To* DEBI'LITATE. v. a. [debilito, Lat.] To weaken: to make faint; to enfeeble; to emasculate.

In the lust of the eye, the lust of the flesh, and the pride of life, they seemed as weakly to fail as their debilitated posterity ever after. Brown's Vulg. Err.

The spirits being rendered languid, are incapable of purifying the blood, and debilitated in attracting nutriment. Harvey on Consumptions.

DEBILITA'TION. n. s. [from debilitatio, Lat.] The act of weakening.

The weakness cannot return any thing of strength, honour, or safety to the head, but a debilitation and ruin. King Charles.

DEBI'LITY. n. s. [debilitas, Lat.] Weakness; feebleness; languor; faintness; imbecility.

Methinks I am partaker of thy passion,
And in thy case do glass mine own debility. Sidney.

DEBONA'IR. adj. [debonnaire, Fr.] Elegant; civil; well-bred; gentle; complaisant. an obsolete word.

Crying, let be that lady debonair,
Thou recreant knight, and soon thyself prepare
To battle, if thou mean her love to gain. Spenser.

Zephyr met her once a-maying;
Fill'd her with thee, a daughter fair,
So buxom, blithe, and debonair. Milton.

The nature of the one is debonair and accostable; of the other, retired and supercilious; the one quick and sprightful, the other slow and saturnine. Howel's Vocal Forest.

And she that was not only passing fair,
But was withal discreet and debonair,
Resolv'd the passive doctrine to fulfil. Dryden.

DEBONA'IRLY. adv. [from debonair.] Elegantly; with a genteel air.

DEBT. n. s. [debitum, Lat. dette, Fr.]

1. That which one man owes to another.

There was one that died greatly in debt: Well, says one, if he be gone, then he hath carried five hundred ducats of mine with him into the other world. Bacon's Apothegms.

The debt of ten thousand talents, which the servant owed the king, was no slight ordinary sum. Duppa's Devotions.

To this great loss a sea of tears is due;
But the whole debt not to be paid by you. Waller.

Swift, a thousand pounds in debt,
Takes horse, and in a mighty fret
Rides day and night. Swift.

2. That which any one is obliged to do or suffer.

Your son, my lord, has paid a soldier's debt;
He only liv'd but till he was a man,
But like a man he died. Shakesp. Macbeth.

To DECK. v. a. [decken, Dut.]

1. To cover; to overspread.

Ye mists and exhalations, that now rise
From hill or steaming lake, dusky or grey,
In honour to the world's great Author, rise!
Whether to deck with clouds th' uncolour'd sky,
Or wet the thirsty earth with falling showers,
Rising or falling, still advance his praise. Milton.

2. To dress; to array.

Sweet ornament! that decks a thing divine.
Shakesp.

Long may'st thou live to wail thy children's loss,
And see another, as I see thee now,
Deck'd in thy rights, as thou art stall'd in mine.
Shakesp.

She sets to work millions of spinning worms,
That in their green shops weave the smooth-hair'd silk,
To deck her sons. Milton.

3. To adorn; to embellish.

But direful, deadly black, both leaf and bloom,
Fit to adorn the dead, and deck the dreary tomb.
Spenser.

Now the dew with spangles deck'd the ground,
A sweeter spot of earth was never found. Dryden.

The god shall to his vot'ries tell
Each conscious tear, each blushing grace,
That deck'd dear Eloisa's face. Prior.

DECK. n. s. [from the verb.]

The same had not consented to the council and deed. Luke.

We are not secluded from the expectation of reward for our charitable deeds. Smalridge's Serm.

2. Exploit; performance.

I, on the other side,
Us'd no ambition to commend my deeds;
The deeds themselves, tho' mute, spoke loud the doer. Milton.

Thousands were there, in darker fame that dwell,
Whose deeds some nobler poem shall adorn. Dryd.

3. Power of action; agency.

Nor knew I not
To be with will and deed created free. Milton.

4. Act declaratory of an opinion.

They desire, with strange absurdity, that to the same senate it should belong to give full judgment in matter of excommunication, and to absolve whom it pleased them, clean contrary to their own former deeds and oaths. Hooker.

5. Written evidence of any legal act.

The solicitor gave an evidence for a deed, which was impeached to be fraudulent. Bacon.

He builds his house upon the sand, and writes the deeds by which he holds his estate upon the face of a river. South.

6. Fact; reality; the contrary to fiction: whence the word indeed.

O that, as oft I have at Athens seen
The stage arise, and the big clouds descend;
So now in very deed I might behold
The pond'rous earth, and all yon marble roof,
Meet like the hands of Jove. Lee's Oedipus.

DEE'DLESS. adj. [from deed.] Unactive; without action; without exploits.

Speaking in deeds, and deedless in his tongue. Shakesp.

Instant, he cried, your female discord end,
Ye deedless boasters! and the song attend. Pope.

2. Decision; determination.

3. [In logick.] The explication of the essence of a thing by its kind and difference.

What is man? Not a reasonable animal merely; for that is not an adequate and distinguishing definition. Bentley.

DEFI'NITIVE. adj. [definitivus, Lat.] Determinate; positive; express.

Other authors write often dubiously, even in matters wherein is expected a strict and definitive truth. Brown's Vulg. Err.

I make haste to the casting and comparting of the whole work, it being indeed the very definitive sum of this art, to distribute usefully and gracefully a well chosen plot. Wotton.

DEFI'NITIVELY. adv. [from definitive.] Positively; decisively; expressly.

Definitively thus I answer you:
Your love deserves my thanks; but my desert;
Unmeritable, shuns your high request. Shakesp.

Bellarmine saith, because we think that the body of Christ may be in many places at once, locally and visibly; therefore we say and hold, that the same body may be circumspectively and definitively in more places at once. Hall.

That Methuselah was the longest lived of all the children of Adam, we need not grant; nor is it definitively set down by Moses. Brown's Vulg. Err.

DEFI'NITIVENESS. n. s. [from definitive.] Decisiveness. Dict.

DEFLAGRABI'LITY. n. s. [from deflagro, Lat.] Combustibility; the quality of taking fire, and burning totally away.

We have spent more time than the opinion of the ready deflagrability, if I may so speak, of saltpetre did permit us to imagine. Boyle.

DEFLA'GRABLE. adj. [from deflagro, Lat.] Having the quality of wasting away wholly in fire, without any remains.

Our chymical oils, supposing that they were exactly pure, yet they would be, as the best spirit of wine is, but the more inflammable and deflagrable. Boyle.

DEFLAGRA'TION. n. s. [deflagratio, Lat.]

A term frequently made use of in chymistry, for setting fire to several things in their preparation; as in making Æthiops with fire, with sal prunellæ, and many others. Quincy.

The true reason why paper is not burned by the flame that plays about it, seems to be that the aqueous part of the spirit of wine, being imbibed by the paper, keeps it so moist, that the flame of the sulphureous parts of the same spirit cannot fasten on it; and therefore, when the deflagration is over, you shall always find the paper moist. Boyle.

To* DEFLE'CT. v. n. [deflecto, Lat.] To turn aside; to deviate from a true course or right line.

At some parts of the Azores the needle deflecteth not, but lieth in the true meridian: on the other side of the Azores, and this side of the equator, the north point of the needle wheeleth to the west. Brown's Vulg. Err.

For, did not some from a straight course deflect,
They could not meet, they could no world erect. Blackmore.

DEFLE'CTION. n. s. [from deflecto, Lat.]

1. Deviation; the act of turning aside.

Needles incline to the south on the other side of the equator; and at the very line, or middle circle, stand without deflection. Brown's Vulg. Err.

DEFLU'XION. n. s. [defluxio, Lat.] The flow of humours downwards.

We see that taking cold moveth looseness, by contraction of the skin and outward parts; and so doth cold likewise cause rheums and defluxions from the head. Bacon.

DE'FLY. adv. [from deft.] Dexterously; skilfully. Obsolete. Properly deftly.

Lo, how finely the graces can it foot
To the instrument;
They dauncen deftly, and singen soote,
In their merriment. Spenser.

DEFOEDA'TION. n. s. [from defædus, Lat.] The act of making filthy; pollution. This is no English word; at least, to make it English, it should be written defedation.

What native unextinguishable beauty must be impressed and instincted through the whole, which the defædation of so many parts by a bad printer, and a worse editor, could not hinder from shining forth! Bentley.

DEFO'RCEMENT. n. s. [from force.] A withholding of lands and tenements by force from the right owner.

To DEFO'RM. v. a. [deformo, Lat.]

1. To disfigure; to make ugly; to spoil the form of any thing.

I that am curtail'd of all fair proportion,
Cheated of feature by dissembling nature,
Deform'd, unfinish'd, sent before my time
Into this breathing world, scarce half made up.
Shakesp.

Wintry blasts
Deform the year delightless. Thomson.

2. To dishonour; to make ungraceful.

Old men with dust deform'd their hoary hair.
Dryden.

DEFO'RM. adj. [deformis, Lat.] Ugly; disfigured; of an irregular form.

I did proclaim,
That whoso kill'd that monster most deform,
Should have mine only daughter to his dame.
Spenser.

So spake the grisely terror; and in shape,
So speaking and so threatening, grew tenfold
More dreadful and deform. Milton.

Sight so deform what heart of rock could long
Dry-eyed behold? Milton.

DEFORMA'TION. n. s. [deformatio, Lat.] A defacing; a disfiguring.

DEFO'RMITY. n. s. [deformitas, Lat.]

1. Ugliness; ill-favouredness.

I, in this weak piping time of peace,
Have no delight to pass away the time,
Unless to spy my shadow in the sun,
And descant on mine own deformity. Shakesp.

Proper deformity seems not in the fiend
So horrid as in woman. Shakesp.

Where sits deformity to mock my body,
To shape my legs of an unequal size,
To disproportion me in every part. Shakesp.

Why should not man,
Retaining still divine similitude
In part, from such deformities be free,
And for his Maker's image sake, exempt? Milt.

2. Ridiculousness; the quality of something worthy to be laughed at, or censured.

In comedy there is somewhat more of the worse likeness to be taken, because it is often to produce laughter, which is occasioned by the sight of some deformity. Dryden.

3. Irregularity; inordinateness.

No glory is more to be envied than that of due reforming either church or state, when deformities are such, that the perturbation and novelty are not like to exceed the benefit of reforming. K. Charles.

DEFO'RSOR. n. s. [from forceur, Fr.] One that overcomes and casteth out by force. A law term. Blount.

To DEFRA'UD. v. a. [defraudo, Lat.] To rob or deprive by a wile or trick; to cheat; to cozen; to deceive; to beguile: with of before the thing taken by fraud.

DEFU'NCTION. n. s. [from defunct.] Death.

Nor did the French possess the Salique land
Until four hundred one and twenty years
After defunction of king Pharamond. Shakesp.

To DEFY' v. a. [deffier, Fr. from de fide decedere, or some like phrase, to fall from allegiance to rebellion, contempt, or insult.]

1. To call to combat; to challenge.

I once again
Defy thee to the trial of mortal fight. Milton.

Where seek retreat, now innocence is fled
Safe in that guard, I durst even hell defy;
Without it, tremble now when heav'n is nigh.
Dryden.

Agis, the Lycian, stepping forth with pride,
To single fight the boldest foe defied. Dryden.

2. To treat with contempt; to slight.

As many fools that stand in better place,
Garnish'd like him, that for a tricksy word
Defy the matter. Shakesp.

DEFY' n. s. [from the verb.] A challenge; an invitation to fight: this is now hardly used.

At this the challenger, with fierce defy,
His trumpet sounds; the challeng'd makes reply:
With clangour rings the field, resounds the vaulted sky. Dryden.

DEFY'ER. n. s. [from defy.] A challenger; one that invites to fight: more properly defier.

God may revenge the affronts put upon them by such impudent defyers of both, as neither believe a God, nor ought to be believed by man. South.

DEGE'NERACY. n. s. [from degeneratio, Lat.]

1. A departure from the virtue of our ancestors.

2. A desertion of that which is good.

'Tis true, we have contracted a great deal of weakness and impotency by our wilful degeneracy from goodness; but that grace, which the gospel offers to us for our assistance, is sufficient for us. Tillotson.

The ruin of a state is generally preceded by an universal degeneracy of manners, and contempt of religion, which is entirely our case at present. Swift

3. Meanness.

DEGENE'RATE. adj. [from the verb.]

1. Unlike his ancestors; fallen from the virtue and merit of his ancestors.

Thou art like enough
To fight against me under Piercy's pay;
To dog his heels, and curt'sy at his frowns,
To show how much thou art degenerate. Shakesp

Yet thou hast greater cause to be
Asham'd of them, than they of thee;

Degenerate from their ancient brood,
Since first the court allow'd them food. Swift.

2. Unworthy; base; departing from its kind or nature.

So all shall turn degen'rate, all deprav'd;
Justice and temperance, truth and faith, forgot!
One man except. Milton.

DE'LUGE. n. s. [deluge, Fr. from diluvium, Lat.]

. . A general inundation; laying entirely under water.

The apostle doth plainly intimate, that the old world was subject to perish by a deluge, as this is subject to perish by conflagration. Burnet's Theory.

2. An overflowing of the natural bounds of a river.

But if with bays and dams they strive to force
His channel to a new or narrow course,
No longer then within his banks he dwells,
First to a torrent, then a deluge, swells. Denham.

3. Any sudden and resistless calamity.

To DE'LUGE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To drown; to lay totally under water.

The restless flood the land would overflow,
By which the delug'd earth would useless grow. Blackmore.

Still the battering waves rush in
Implacable, till delug'd by the foam,
The ship sinks, found'ring in the vast abyss. Philips.

2. To overwhelm; to cause to sink under the weight of any calamity.

At length corruption, like a general flood,
Shall deluge all. Pope.

DELU'SION. n. s. [delusio, Lat.]

1. The act of deluding; a cheat; guile; deceit; treachery; fraud; collusion; falsehood.

2. The state of one deluded.

3. A false representation; illusion; errour; a chimerical thought.

Who therefore seeks in these
True wisdom, finds her not, or by delusion. Milton.

I waking, view'd with grief the rising sun,
And fondly mourn'd the dear delusion gone. Prior.

DELU'SIVE. adj. [from delusus, Lat.] Apt to deceive; beguiling; imposing on.

When, fir'd with passion, we attack the fair,
Delusive sighs and brittle vows we bear. Prior.

The happy whimsey you pursue,
Till you at length believe it true;
Caught by your own delusive art,
You fancy first, and then assert. Prior.

While the base and grovelling multitude were listening to the delusive deities, those of a more erect aspect and exalted spirit separated themselves from the rest. Tatler, No. 81.

Phænomena so delusory that it is very hard to escape imposition and mistake. Woodward.

DELU'SORY. adj. [from delusus, Lat.] Apt to deceive.

This confidence is founded on no better foundation than a desultory prejudice. Glanville.

DE'MAGOGUE. n. s. [δημαγωγὸς.] A ringleader of the rabble; a popular and factious orator.

Who were the chief demagogues and patrons of tumults, to send for them, to flatter and embolden them. King Charles.

A plausible, insignificant word, in the mouth of an expert demagogue, is a dangerous and dreadful weapon. South.

Demosthenes and Cicero, though each of them a leader, or, as the Greeks called it, a demagogue, in a popular state, yet seem to differ in their practice. Swift.

DEMA'IN. DEME'AN. DEME'SNE. n. s. [domaine, Fr.]

1. That land which a man holds originally of himself, called dominium by the civilians, and opposed to feodum or fee, which signifies those that are held of a superior lord. It is sometimes used also for a distinction between those lands that the lord of the manor has in his own hands, or in the hands of his lessee, demised or let upon a rent for a term of years or life, and such other lands appertaining to the said manor as belong to free or copyholders. Phillips.

2. Estate in land.

Having now provided
A gentleman of noble parentage,
Of fair demesnes, youthful, and nobly allied Shak.

That earldom indeed had a royal jurisdiction and seigniory, though the lands of that county in demesne were possessed for the most part by the ancient inheritors. Davies.

3. Land adjoining to the mansion; kept in the lords own hand.

Those acts for planting forest trees have hitherto been wholly ineffectual, except about the demesnes of a few gentlemen; and even there, in general, very unskilfully made. Swift.

To DEMA'ND. v. a. [demander, Fr.]

1. To claim; to ask for with authority.

The pound of flesh which I demand of him,
Is dearly bought; 'tis mine, and I will have it. Shakesp

2. To question; to interrogate.

And when Uriah was come unto him, David demanded of him how Joab did, and how the people did, and how the war prospered? 2 Sam xi 7.

If any friend of Cæsar's demand why Brutus rose against Cæsar, this is my answer: Not that I loved Cæsar less, but that I loved Rome more. Shakesp.

Young one,
Inform us of thy fortunes; for, it seems,
They crave to be demanded. Shakesp.

The oracle of Apollo being demanded, when the war and misery of Greece should have an end, replied, When they would double the altar in Delos, which was of a cubick form. Peacham on Geometry.

3. [In law.] To prosecute in a real action.

DEMA'ND. n. s. [demande, Fr.]

1. A claim; a challenging; the asking of any thing with authority.

This matter is by the decree of the watchers, and the demand by the word of the holy ones. Dan. iv. 17.

Giving vent, gives life and strength, to our appetites; and he that has the confidence to turn his wishes into demands, will be but a little way from thinking he ought to obtain them. Locke.

2. A question; an interrogation.

3. The calling for a thing in order to purchase it.

My bookseller tells me, the demand for those my papers increases daily. Addison.

4. [In law.] The asking of what is due. It hath also a proper signification distinguished from plaint; for all civil actions are pursued either by demands or plaints, and the pursuer is called demandant or plaintiff. There are two manners of demands, the one of deed, the other in law: in deed, as in every præcipe, there is express demand; in law, as every entry in land distress for rent, taking or seizing of goods, and such like acts, which may be done without any words, are demands in law. Blount.

DEMA'NDABLE. adj. [from demand.] That may be demanded; requested; asked for.

All sums demandable, for licence of alienation to be made of lands holden in chief, have been stayed in the way to the hanaper. Bacon.

DEMA'NDANT. n. s. [from demand.]

1. He who is actor or plaintiff in a real action, because he demandeth lands. Coke.

2. A plaintiff; one that demands redress.

One of the witnesses deposed, that dining on a Sunday with the demandant, whose wife had sat below the squire's lady at church, she the said wife dropped some expressions, as if she thought her husband ought to be knighted. Spectator.

DEMA'NDER. n. s. [demandeur, Fr.]

1. One that requires a thing with authority.

2. One that asks a question.

3. One that asks for a thing in order to purchase it.

They grow very fast and fat, which also betters eth their taste, and delivereth them to the demanders ready use at all seasons. Carew.

4. A dunner; one that demands a debt.

DEME'AN. n. s. [from demener, Fr.] A mien; presence; carriage; demeanour, deportment.

At his feet, with sorrowful demean,
And deadly hue, an armed corse did lie. Spenser.

To DEME'AN. v. a. [from demener, Fr.]

1. To behave; to carry one's self.

Those plain and legible lines of duty requiring us to demean ourselves to God humbly and devoutly, to our governors obediently, and to our neighbours justly, and to ourselves soberly and temperately. South.

A man cannot doubt but that there is a God; and that, according as he demeans himself towards him, he will make him happy or miserable for ever. Tillotson.

Strephon had long perplex'd his brains,
How with so high a nymph he might
Demean himself the wedding-night. Swift.

2. To lessen; to debase; to undervalue.

Now, out of doubt, Antipholis is mad;
Else he would never so demean himself. Shakesp

DEME'ANOUR. n. s. [demener, Fr.] Carriage; behaviour.

Of so insupportable a pride he was, that where his deeds might well stir envy, his demeanour did rather breed disdain. Sidney.

Angels best like us, when we are most like unto them in all parts of decent demeanour. Hooker.

His gestures fierce
He mark'd, and mad demeanour, then alone,
As he suppos'd, all unobserv'd, unseen. Milton.

Thus Eve, with sad demeanour meek,
Ill worthy I. Milton.

He was of a courage not to be daunted, which was manifested in all his actions, especially in his whole demeanour at Rhee, both at the landing and upon the retreat. Clarendon.

DEME'ANS. n. s. pl. properly demesnes. An estates in lands; that which a man possesses in his own right.

To DEMENTATE. v. n. [demento, Lat.] To make mad.

DEMENTA'TION. n. s. [dementatio, Lat.] Making mad, or frantick.

DE'MERIT. n. s. [demérite, Fr. from demeritus, of demereor, Lat.]

1. The opposite to merit; ill deserving;

what makes one worthy of blame or punishment.

They should not be able once to stir, or to murmur, but it should be known, and they shortened according to their demerits. Spenser on Ireland.

Thou liv'st by me, to me thy breath resign;
Mine is the merit, the demerit thine. Dryden.

Whatever they acquire by their industry or ingenuity, should be secure, unless forfeited by any demerit or offence against the custom of the family. Temple.

2. Anciently the same with merit; desert.

I fetch my life and being
From men of royal siege; and my demerits
May speak, unbonnetting, to as proud a fortune
As this that I have reach'd. Shakesp. Othello.

To DEMERIT. v. a. [demeriter, Fr.] To deserve blame or punishment.

Why he hath thus ensnar'd my soul and body? Shak. Othello.

DEMI-GOD. n. s. [demi and god.] Partaking of divine nature; half a god; an hero produced by the cohabitation of divinities with mortals.

He took his leave of them, whose eyes bade him farewel with tears, making temples to him as to a demi-god. Sidney

Be gods, or angels, demi-gods. Milton.

Transported demi-gods stood round,
And men grew heroes at the sound,
Enflam'd with glory's charms. Pope.

Nay, half in heaven, except (what's mighty odd)
A fit of vapours clouds this demi-god. Pope.

DEMI-LANCE. n. s. [demi and lance.] A light lance; a short spear; a half-pike.

On their steel'd heads their demi-lances wore
Small pennons, which their ladies colours bore. Dryden.

DEMONSTRABLE. adj. [demonstrabilis, Lat.] That which may be proved beyond doubt or contradiction; that which may be made not only probable but evident.

The grand articles of our belief are as demonstrable as geometry. Glanville.

DEMONSTRABLY. adv. [from demonstrable.] In such a manner as admits of certain proof; evidently; beyond possibility of contradiction.

He should have compelled his ministers to execute the law, in cases that demonstrably concerned the publick peace. Clarendon.

To DEMONSTRATE. v. a. [demonstro, Lat.] To prove with the highest degree of certainty; to prove in such a manner as reduces the contrary position to evident absurdity.

We cannot demonstrate these things so as to shew that the contrary often involves a contradiction. Tillotson.

DEMONSTRA'TION. n. s. [demonstratio, Lat.]

1. The highest degree of deducible or argumental evidence; the strongest degree of proof; such proof as not only evinces the position proved to be true, but shews the contrary position to be absurd and impossible.

What appeareth to be true by strong and invincible demonstration, such as wherein it is not by any way possible to be deceived, thereunto the mind doth necessarily yield. Hooker.

Where the agreement or disagreement of any thing is plainly and clearly perceived, it is called demonstration. Locke.

2. Indubitable evidence of the senses or reason.

Which way soever we turn ourselves, we are encountered with clear evidences and sensible demonstrations of a Deity. Tillotson.

DEMO'NSTRATIVE. adj. [demonstrativus, Lat.]

1. Having the power of demonstration; invincibly conclusive; certain.

An argument necessary and demonstrative, is such as, being proposed unto any man, and understood, the man cannot choose but inwardly yield. Hooker.

2. Having the power of expressing clearly and certainly.

Painting is necessary to all other arts, because of the need which they have of demonstrative figures, which often give more light to the understanding than the clearest discourses. Dryden.

DEMO'NSTRATIVELY. adv. [from demonstrative.]

1. With evidence not to be opposed or doubted.

No man, in matters of this life, requires an assurance either of the good which he designs, or of the evil which he avoids, from arguments demonstratively certain. South.

First, I demonstratively prove,
That feet were only made to move. Prior

2. Clearly; plainly; with certain knowledge.

Demonstratively understanding the simplicity of perfection, it was not in the power of earth to work them from it. Brown.

DEMONSTRA'TOR. n. s. [from demonstrate.] One that proves; one that teaches; one that demonstrates.

DEMONSTRA'TORY. adj. [from demonstrate.] Having the tendency to demonstrate.

DEMU'LCENT. adj. [demulcens, Lat.] Softening; mollifying; assuasive.

Pease, being deprived of any aromatick parts, are mild and demulcent in the highest degree; but, being full of aerial particles, are flatulent, when dissolved by digestion. Arbuthnot.

To DEMU'R. v. n. [demeurer, Fr. dimorare, Ital. demorari, Lat.]

Running into demands, they expect from us a sudden resolution in things wherein the devil of Delphos would demur. Brown's Vulg. Err.

He must be of a very sluggish or querulous humour, that shall demur upon setting out, or demand higher encouragements than the hope of heaven. Decay of Piety.

News of my death from rumour he receiv'd,
And what he wish'd he easily believ'd;
But long demurr'd, tho' from my hand he knew
I liv'd, so loth he was to think it true. Dryden.

3. To doubt; to have scruples or difficulties; to deliberate.

There is something in our composition that thinks and apprehends, and reflects and deliberates, determines and doubts, consents and denies; that wills and demurs, and resolves, and chuses, and rejects. Bentley.

To DEMU'R. v. a. To doubt of.

The latter I demur; for in their looks
Much reason, and in their actions, oft appears. Milton.

DEMU'R. n. s. [from the verb.] Doubt; hesitation; suspense of opinion.

O progeny of heav'n, empyreal thrones!
With reason hath deep silence and demur
Seiz'd us, though undismay'd. Milton.

Certainly the highest and dearest concerns of a temporal life are infinitely less valuable than those of an eternal; and consequently ought, without any demur at all, to be sacrificed to them, whensoever they come in competition with them. South.

All my demurs but double his attacks;
At last he whispers, Do, and we go snacks. Pope.

DEMU'RE. adj. [des mœurs, Fr.]

1. Sober; decent.

Lo! two most lovely virgins came in place,
With countenance demure, and modest grace. Spenser.

Come, pensive nun, devout and pure,
Sober, stedfast, and demure. Milton.

2. Grave; affectedly modest: it is now generally taken in a sense of contempt.

After a demure travel of regard, I tell them I know my place, as I would they should do theirs. Shakesp.

There be many wise men, that have secret hearts and transparent countenances; yet this would be done with a demure abasing of your eye sometimes. Bacon.

A cat lay and looked so demure as if there had been neither life nor soul in her. L'Estrange.

So cat, transform'd, sat gravely and demure,
Till mouse appear'd, and thought himself secure. Dryden.

Jove sent and found, far in a country scene,
Truth, innocence, good-nature, look serene;
From which ingredients, first, the dext'rous boy
Pick'd the demure, the awkward, and the coy. Swift.

To DEMU'RE. v. n. [from the noun.] To look with an affected modesty: not used.

Your wife Octavia, with her modest eyes,
And still conclusion, shall acquire no honour,
Demuring upon me. Shakesp.

DEMU'RELY. adv. [from demure.]

1. With affected modesty; solemnly; with pretended gravity.

Put on a sober habit,
Talk with respect, and swear but now and then,
Wear prayer-books in my pocket, look demurely. Shakesp.

Esop's damsel, turned from a cat to a woman, sat very demurely at the board's end, till a mouse ran before her. Bacon.

Next stood Hypocrisy with holy leer,
Soft smiling, and demurely looking down;
But hid the dagger underneath the gown. Dryden.

2. In the following line it is the same with solemnly. Warburton.

Hark, how the drums demurely wake the sleepers! Shakesp.

DEMU'RENESS. n. s. [from demure.]

1. Modesty; soberness; gravity of aspect.

Her eyes having in them such a cheerfulness, as nature seemed to smile in them; though her mouth and cheeks obeyed to that pretty demureness, which the more one marked, the more one would judge the poor soul apt to believe. Sidney.

2. Affected modesty; pretended gravity.

DEMU'RRAGE. n. s. [from demur.] An allowance made by merchants to masters of ships, for their stay in a port behind the time appointed.

DEMU'RRER. n. s. [demeurer, Fr. i. e. manere in aliquo loco, vel morari.] A kind of pause upon a point of difficulty in an action; for, in every action, the controversy consists either in the fact, or in the law: if in the fact, that is tried by the jury; if in law, then is the case plain to the judge, or so hard and rare, as it breedeth just doubt. I call that plain to the judge, wherein he is assured of the law; and in such case the judge, with his associates, proceeds to judgment without farther work. But when it is doubtful to him and his associates, then is there stay made, and a time taken, either for the court to think farther upon it, and to agree, if they can; or else for all the justices to meet together in the Chequer-chamber, and, upon hearing that which the serjeants can say of both parts, to advise, and set down as law, whatsoever they conclude firm, without farther remedy. Cowell.

A prohibition was granted, and hereunto these was a demurrer. Ayliffe's Parergon.

DEN. n. s. [ðen, Sax.]

1. A cavern or hollow running horizontally, or with a small obliquity, under ground; distinct from a hole which runs down perpendicularly.

They here dispersed, some in the air, some on the earth, some in the waters, some amongst the minerals, dens, and caves under the earth. Hooker.

2. The cave of a wild beast.

What, shall they seek the lion in his den,
And fright him there? Shakesp.

The tyrant's den, whose use, though lost to fame,
Was now th' apartment of the royal dame;
The cavern, only to her father known,
By him was to his darling daughter shown. Dryd.

'Tis then the shapeless bear his den forsakes;
In woods and fields a wide destruction makes. Dryden.

3. Den, the termination of a local name, may signify either a valley or a woody place; for the Saxon ðen imports both. Gibson's Camden.

DENA'Y. n. s. [a word formed between deny and nay.] Denial; refusal.

To her in haste, give her this jewel: say,
My love can give no place, bide no denay. Shak.

DENDRO'LOGY. n. s. [δένδρον and λόγος.] The natural history of trees.

DENI'ABLE. adj. [from deny.] That which may be denied; that to which one may refuse belief.

The negative authority is also deniable by reason. Brown.

DENI'AL. n. s. [from deny.]

1. Negation; the contrary to affirmation.

2. Negation; the contrary to confession.

No man more impudent to deny, where proofs were not manifest; no man more ready to confess, with a repenting manner of aggravating his own evil, where denial would but make the fault fouler. Sidney.

3. Refusal; the contrary to grant; allowance, or concession.

Here comes your father; never make denial:
I must and will have Catherine to my wife. Shak.

The denial of landing, and hasty warning us away, troubled us much. Bacon.

He, at ev'ry fresh attempt, is repell'd
With faint denials, weaker than before. Dryden.

4. Abjuration; contrary to acknowledgment of adherence.

We may deny God in all those acts that are capable of being morally good or evil: those are the proper scenes, in which we act our confessions or denials of him. South.

DENI'ER. n. s. [from deny.]

1. A contradictor; an opponent; one that holds the negative of a proposition.

By the word Virtue the affirmer intends our whole duty to God and man, and the denier by the word Virtue means only courage, or, at most, our duty towards our neighbour, without including the idea of the duty which we owe to God. Watts.

2. A disowner; one that does not own or acknowledge.

If it was so fearful when Christ looked his denier into repentance, what will it be when he shall look him into destruction? South.

3. A refuser; one that refuses.

It may be I am esteemed by my denier sufficient of myself to discharge my duty to God as a priest, though not to men as a prince. King Charles.

DENIE'R. n. s. [from denarius, Lat.] It is pronounced as deneer, in two syllables.] A small denomination of French money; the twelfth part of a sous.

You will not pay for the glasses you have burst?
——No, not a denier. Shakesp.

To* DE'NIGRATE. v. a. [denigro, Lat.] To blacken; to make black.

By suffering some impression from fire, bodies are casually or artificially denigrated in their natural complexion: thus are charcoals made black by an infection of their own suffitus. Brown's Vulg. Er.

Hartshorn, and other white bodies, will be denigrated by heat; yet camphire would not at all lose its whiteness. Boyle.

DENIGRA'TION. n. s. [denigratio, Lat.] A blackening; or making black.

These are the advenient and artificial ways of denigration, answerably whereto may be the natural progress. Brown.

In several instances of denigration, the metals are worn off, or otherwise reduced into very minute parts. Boyle.

DENIZA'TION. n. s. [from denizen.] The act of infranchising, or making free.

That the mere Irish were reputed aliens, appears by the charters of denization, which in all ages were purchased by them. Davies.

DE'NIZEN. } n. s. [from dinasddyn, a
DE'NISON. } man of the city; or dinesydd free of the city, Welsh.] A freeman; one infranchised.

Denizen is a British law term, which the Saxons and Angles found here and retained. Davies.

Thus th' Almighty Sire began: ye gods,
Natives, or denizens, of blest abodes,
From whence these murmurs? Dryden.

A great many plants will hardly, with nursing, be made to produce their seed out of their native soil; but corn, so necessary for all people, is fitted to grow and to seed as a free denison of the world. Grew.

He summons straight his denizens of air;
The lucid squadrons round the sails repair. Pope.

To* DE'NIZEN. v. a. [from the noun.] To infranchise; to make free.

Pride, lust, covetize, being several
To these three places, yet all are in all;
Mingled thus, their issue is incestuous;
Falsehood is denizen'd, virtue is barbarous. Donne.

DENO'MINABLE. adj. [denomino, Lat.] That may be named or denoted.

An inflammation consists of a sanguineous affluxion, or else is denominable from other humours, according to the predominancy of melancholy, phlegm, or choler. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

To* DENO'MINATE. v. a. [denomino, Lat.] To name; to give a name to.

The commendable purpose of consecration being not of every one understood, they have been construed as though they had superstitiously meant either that those places, which were denominated of angels and saints, should serve for the worship of so glorious creatures; or else those glorious creatures for defence, protection, and patronage of such places. Hooker.

Predestination is destructive to all that is established among men, to all that is most precious to human nature, to the two faculties that denominate us men, understanding and will; for what use can we have of our understandings, if we cannot do what we know to be our duty? And, if we act not voluntarily, what exercise have we of our wills? Hammond.

DENOMINA'TION. n. s. [denominatio, Lat.] A name given to a thing, which commonly marks some principal quality of it.

But is there any token, denomination, or monument of the Gauls yet remaining in Ireland, as there is of the Scythians? Spenser's State of Irel.

The liking or disliking of the people gives the play the denomination of good or bad; but does not really make or constitute it such. Dryden.

Philosophy, the great idol of the learned part of the heathen world, has divided it into many sects and denominations; as Stoicks, Peripateticks, Epicureans, and the like. South.

All men are sinners: the most righteous among us must confess ourselves to come under that denomination. Rogers.

DENO'MINATIVE. adj. [from denominate.]

1. That which gives a name; that which confers a distinct appellation.

2. That which obtains a distinct appellation. This would be more analogically denominable.

The least denominative part of time is a minute, the greatest integer being a year. Cocker's Arith.

DENOMINA'TOR. n. s. [from denominate.] The giver of a name; the person or thing that causes an appellation.

Both the seas of one name should have one common denominator. Brown's Vulg. Err.

DENOMINATOR of a Fraction, is the number below the line, shewing the nature and quality of the parts, which any integer is supposed to be divided into: thus in $\frac{6}{8}$, 8 the denominator shews you, that the integer is supposed to be divided into 8 parts, or half quarters; and the numerator 6 shews, that you take 6 of such parts, i. e. three quarters of the whole. Harris.

When a single broken number or fraction hath for its denominator a number consisting of an unit, in the first place towards the left hand, and nothing but cyphers from the unit towards the right hand, it is then more aptly and rightly called a decimal fraction. Cocker's Arithmeticks.

Denominator of any proportion, is the quotient arising from the division of the antecedent by the consequent: thus 6 is the denominator of the proportion that 30 hath to 5, because 5) 30 (6 This is also called the exponent of the proportion, or ratio. Harris.

DENOTA'TION. n. s. [denotatio, Lat.] The act of denoting.

Here comes the sad denouncer of my fate,
To toll the mournful knell of separation. Dryden.

DENSE. adj. [densus, Lat.] Close; compact; approaching to solidity; having small interstices between the constituent particles.

The cause of cold is the density of the body; for all dense bodies are colder than most other bodies, as metals, stone, glass; and they are longer in heating than softer bodies. Bacon.

In the air the higher you go, the less it is compressed, and consequently the less dense it is; and so the upper part is exceedingly thinner than the lower part which we breathe. Locke.

To* DE'NSHIRE. v. a. A barbarous term of husbandry.

Burning of land, or burn-bating, is commonly called denshiring, that is, Devonshiring or Denbighshiring, because most used or first invented there Mortimer.

DE'NSITY. n. s. [densitas, Lat.] Closeness; compactness; close adhesion, or near approach, of parts.

While the densest of metals, gold, if foliated, is transparent, and all metals become transparent if dissolved in menstruums, or vitrified, the opacity of white metals ariseth not from their density alone. Newton.

The air within the vessels being of a less density, the outward air would press their sides together; and, being of a greater density, would expand them so as to endanger the life of the animal. Arbuth. on Aliments.

DE'NTAL. adj. [dentalis, Lat.]

1. Belonging or relating to the teeth.

2. [In grammar.] Pronounced principally by the agency of the teeth.

The Hebrews have assigned which letters are labial, which dental, and which guttural. Bacon.

To DEPRECATE. v. a.

1. To beg off; to pray deliverance from; to avert by prayer.

In deprecating of evil, we make an humble acknowledgment of guilt, and of God's justice in chastising, as well as clemency in sparing, the guilty. Grew.

Poverty indeed, in all its degrees, men are easily persuaded to deprecate from themselves. Rogers.

The judgments which we would deprecate are not removed. Smalridge.

The Italian entered them in his prayer: amongst the three evils he petitioned to be delivered from, he might have deprecated greater evils.
Baker's Reflections on Learning.

2. To implore mercy of: this is not proper.

At length he sets
Those darts, whose points make gods adore
His might, and deprecate his power. Prior.

DEPRECA'TION. n. s. [deprecatio, Lat.]

1. Prayer against evil.

I, with leave of speech implor'd,
And humble deprecation, thus replied. Milton.

Sternutation they generally conceived to be a good sign, or a bad one; and so, upon this motion, they commonly used a gratulation for the one, and a deprecation for the other. Brown.

2. Intreaty; petitioning.

3. An excusing; a begging pardon for.

DE'PRECATIVE. } adj. [from deprecate.]
DE'PRECATORY. } That serves to deprecate; apologetick; tending to avert evil by supplication.

The same thing I have tried by letting a globe rest, and raising or depressing the eye, or otherwise moving it, to make the angle of a just magnitude. Newton.

3. To humble; to deject; to sink.

Others depress their own minds, despond at the first difficulty, and conclude that the making any progress in knowledge is above their capacities. Locke.

If we consider how often it breaks the gloom, which is apt to depress the mind, with transient unexpected gleams of joy, one would take care not to grow too wise for so great a pleasure of life. Addis.

Passion can depress or raise
The heavenly, as the human mind. Prior.

DEPRE'SSION. n. s. [depressio, Lat.]

1. The act of pressing down.

Bricks of a rectangular form, if laid one by another in a level row between supporters sustaining the two ends, all the pieces between will necessarily sink by their own gravity; and much more, if they suffer any depression by other weight above them. Wotton.

2. The sinking or falling in of a surface.

The beams of light are such subtile bodies, that, in respect of them, even surfaces, that are sensibly smooth, are not exactly so: they have their own degree of roughness, consisting of little protuberances and depressions; and consequently such inequalities may suffice to give bodies different colours, as we see in marble that appears white or black, or red, or blue, even when most carefully polished. Boyle

If the bone be much depressed, and the fissure considerably large, it is then at your choice, whether you will enlarge that fissure, or continue it for the evacuation of the matter, and forbear the use of the trepan not doubting but a small depression of the bone will either rise, or cast off, by the benefit of nature. Wiseman.

3. The act of humbling; abasement.

Depression of the nobility may make a king more absolute, but less safe Bacon.

DEPRESSION of an Equation [in algebra] is the bringing it into lower and more simple terms by division. Dict.

Now wretched Oedipus, deprived of sight,
Led a long death in everlasting night. Pope.

2. To hinder; to debar from: Milton uses it without of.

From his face I shall be hid, depriv'd
His blessed countenance. Milton.

The ghosts rejected, are th' unhappy crew
Deprived of sepulchres and fun'ral due. Dryden.

3. To release; to free from.

Most happy he,
Whose least delight sufficeth to deprive
Remembrance of all pains which him opprest. Spen.

4. To put out of an office.

A minister, deprived for inconformity, said, that if they deprived him, it should cost an hundred men's lives. Bacon.

DEPTH. n. s. [from deep, of diep, Dut.]

1. Deepness; the measure of any thing from the surface downwards.

As for men, they had buildings in many places higher than the depth of the water. Bacon.

We have large and deep caves of several depths: the deepest are sunk six hundred fathoms. Bacon.

The left to that unhappy region tends,
Which to the depth of Tartarus descends. Dryd.

For tho', in nature, depth and height
Are equally held infinite;
In poetry the height we know,
'Tis only infinite below. Swift.

2. Deep place; not a shoal.

The false tides skim o'er the cover'd land,
And seamen with dissembled depths betray. Dryd.

3. The abyss; a gulph of infinite profundity.

When he prepared the heavens I was there, when he set a compass upon the face of the depth. Prov. viii. 27.

To DE'PURATE. v. a. [depurer, Fr. from depurgo, Lat.] To purify; to cleanse; to free any thing from its impurities.

Chemistry enabling us to depurate bodies, and in some measure to analize them, and take asunder their heterogeneous parts, in many chemical experiments we may, better than in others, know what manner of bodies we employ. Boyle.

DE'PURATE. adj. [from the verb.]

1. Cleansed; freed from dregs and impurities.
2. Pure; not contaminated.

Neither can any boast a knowledge depurate from the defilement of a contrary, within this atmosphere of flesh. Glanville.

DEPURA'TION. n. s. [depuratio, Lat.]

1. The act of separating the pure from the impure part of any thing.

Brimstone is a mineral body, of fat and inflammable parts; and this is either used crude, and called sulphur vive; or is of a sadder colour, and, after depuration, such as we have in magdeleons, or rolls of a lighter yellow. Brown's Vulg. Errours.

What hath been hitherto discoursed, inclines us to look upon the ventilation and depuration of the blood as one of the principal and constant uses of respiration. Boyle.

2. The cleansing of a wound from its matter.

To DEPU'RE. v. a. [depurer, Fr.]

1. To cleanse; to free from impurities.
2. To purge; to free from some noxious quality.

It produced plants of such imperfection and harmful quality, as the waters of the general flood could not so wash out or depure, but that the same defection hath had continuance in the very generation and nature of mankind. Raleigh.

DEPUTA'TION. n. s. [deputation, Fr.]

1. The act of deputing, or sending away with a special commission.
2. Vicegerency; the possession of any commission given.

Cut me off the heads
Of all the fav'rites that the absent king
In deputation left behind him here,
When he was personal in the Irish war. Shakesp.

He looks not below the moon, but hath designed the regiment of sublunary affairs into sublunary deputations. Brown.

The authority of conscience stands founded upon its vicegerency and deputation under God. South.

To DEPUTE. v. a. [deputer, Fr.] To send with a special commission; to impower one to transact instead of another.

And Absalom said unto him, See thy matters are good and right, but there is no man deputed of the king to hear. 2 Sam.

And Linus thus, deputed by the rest,
The heroes welcome and their thanks express'd. Roscommon.

A bishop, by deputing a priest or chaplain to administer the sacraments, may remove him. Ayliffe's Parergon.

DE'PUTY. n. s. [deputé, Fr. from deputatus, Lat.]

Vanity is the natural weakness of an ambitious man, which exposes him to the secret scorn and derision of those he converses with. Addison.

2. Contempt; scorn; a laughing-stock.

I am in derision daily; every one mocketh me. Jer. xx. 7.

Thou makest us a reproach to our neighbours, a scorn and a derision to them that are round about us. Psalm xliv. 13.

Ensnar'd, assaulted, overcome; led bound,
Thy foes derision, captive, poor, and blind,
Into a dungeon thrust. Milton.

DERI'SIVE. adj. [from deride.] Mocking; scoffing.

O'er all the dome they quaff, they feast;
Derisive taunts were spread from guest to guest,
And each in jovial mood his mate address'd. Pope.

DERI'SORY. adj. [derisorius, Lat.] Mocking; ridiculing.

DERI'VABLE. adj. [from derive.] Attainable by right of descent or derivation.

God has declared this the eternal rule and standard of all honour derivable upon me, that those who honour him shall be honoured by him. South.

DERIVA'TION. n. s. [derivatio, Lat.]

1. A draining of water; a turning of its course.

When the water began to swell, it would every way discharge itself by any descents or declivities of the ground; and these issues and derivations being once made, and supplied with new waters pushing them forwards, would continue their course till they arrived at the sea, just as other rivers do. Burnet.

2. [In grammar.] The tracing of a word from its original.

Your lordship here seems to dislike my taking notice that the derivation of the word Substance favours the idea we have of it; and your lordship tells me, that very little weight is to be laid on it, on a bare grammatical etymology. Locke.

3. The transmission of any thing from its source.

As touching traditional communication, and tradition of those truths that I call connatural and engraven, I do not doubt but many of those truths have had the help of that derivation. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

4. [In medicine.] The drawing of a humour from one part of the body to another.

Derivation differs from revulsion only in the measure of the distance, and the force of the medicines used: if we draw it to some very remote, or, it may be, contrary part, we call that revulsion; if only to some neighbouring place, and by gentle means, we call it derivation. Wiseman.

5. The thing deduced or derived: not used.

Most of them are the genuine derivations of the hypothesis they claim to. Glanville.

DERI'VATIVE. adj. [derivativus, Lat.] Derived or taken from another.

As it is a derivative perfection, so it is a distinct kind of perfection from that which is in God. Hale.

DERI'VATIVE. n. s. [from the adjective.] The thing or word derived or taken from another.

For honour,
'Tis a derivative from me to mine,
And only that I stand for. Shakesp.

The word Honestus originally and strictly signifies no more than creditable, and is but a derivative from Honor, which signifies credit or honour. South.

DERI'VATIVELY. adv. [from derivative.] In a derivative manner.

To* DERI'VE. v. a. [deriver, Fr. from derivo, Lat.]

1. To turn the course of water from its channel.

Company lessens the shame of vice by sharing it, and abates the torrent of a common odium by deriving it into many channels. South.

2. To deduce; as from a root, from a cause, from a principal.

They endeavour to derive the varieties of colours from the various proportion of the direct progress or motion of these globules to their circumvolution, or motion about their own centre. Boyle.

Men derive their ideas of duration from their reflection on the train of ideas they observe to succeed one another in their own understandings. Locke.

From these two causes of the laxity and rigidity of the fibres, the methodists, an ancient set of physicians, derived all diseases of human bodies with a great deal of reason; for the fluids derive their qualities from the solids. Arbuthnot.

3. To communicate to another, as from the origin and source.

Christ having Adam's nature as we have, but incorrupt, deriveth not nature, but incorruption, and that immediately from his own person, unto all that belong unto him. Hooker.

4. To receive by transmission.

This property seems rather to have been derived from the pretorian soldiers. Decay of Piety.

The censers of these wretches, who, I am sure, could derive no sanctity to them from their own persons; yet upon this account, tho' they had been consecrated by the offering incense in them, were, by God's special command, sequestered from all common use. South.

5. To communicate to by descent of blood.

Besides the readiness of parts, an excellent disposition of mind is derived to your lordship from the parents of two generations, to whom I have the honour to be known. Felton.

6. To spread; to diffuse gradually from one place to another.

The streams of the publick justice were derived into every part of the kingdom. Davies.

7. [In grammar.] To trace a word from its origin.

To* DERI'VE. v. n.

1. To come from; to owe its origin to.

He that resists the power of Ptolemy,
Resists the pow'r of heav'n; for pow'r from heav'n
Derives, and monarchs rule by gods appointed. Prior.

2. To descend from.

I am, my lord, as well deriv'd as he,
As well possest. Shakesp.

DERI'VER. n. s. [from derive.] One that draws or fetches, as from the source or principle.

Such a one makes a man not only a partaker of other men's sins, but also a deriver of the whole intire guilt of them to himself. South.

We should be injurious to virtue itself, if we did derogate from them whom their industry hath made great. Hooker.

2. To degenerate; to act beneath one's rank, or place, or birth.

Is there no derogation in 't?
—You cannot derogate, my lord. Shakesp.

DE'ROGATE. adj. [from the verb.] Degraded; damaged; lessened in value.

Into her womb convey sterility;
Dry up in her the organs of increase,
And from her derogate body never spring
A babe to honour her! Shakesp. King Lear.

DEROGA'TION. n. s. [derogatio, Lat.]

1. The act of weakening or restraining a former law or contract.

It was indeed but a wooing ambassage, with good respects, to entertain the king in good affection; but nothing was done or handled to the derogation of the king's late treaty with the Italians. Bacon

That which enjoins the deed is certainly God's law; and it is also certain, that the scripture, which allows of the will, is neither the derogation not relaxation of that law. South.

2. A defamation; detraction; the act of lessening or taking away the honour of any person or thing. Sometimes with to, properly with from.

Which, though never so necessary, they could not easily now admit, without some fear of derogation from their credit; and therefore that which once they had done, they became for ever after resolute to maintain. Hooker.

So surely he is a very brave man, neither is that any thing which I speak to his derogation; for in that I said he is a mingled people, it is no dispraise. Spenser on Ireland

The wisest princes need not think it any diminution to their greatness, or derogatim to their sufficiency, to rely upon counsel. Bacon.

I say not this in derogation to Virgil, neither do I contradict any thing which I have formerly said in his just praise. Dryden.

None of these patriots will think it a derogation from their merit to have it said, that they received many lights and advantages from their intimacy with my lord Somers. Addison.

DERO'GATIVE. adj. [derogativus, Lat.] Derogating; lessening the honour of: not in use.

That spirits are corporeal, seems to me a conceit derogative to himself, and such as he should rather labour to overthrow; yet thereby he establisheth the doctrine of lustrations, amulets, and charms. Brown's Vulg. Errours.

DERO'GATORILY. adv. [from derogatory.] In a detracting manner. Dict.

DERO'GATORINESS. n. s. [from derogatory.] The act of derogating. Dict.

DERO'GATORY. adj. [derogatorius, Lat.] Detractious; that lessens the honour of; dishonourable.

They live and die in their absurdities, passing their days in perverted apprehensions and conceptions of the world, derogatory unto God, and the wisdom of the creation. Brown.

These deputed beings are derogatory from the wisdom and power of the Author of Nature, who doubtless can govern this machine he could create, by more direct and easy methods than employing these subservient divinities. Cheyne.

DERVIS. n. s. [dervis, Tr.] A Turkish priest, or monk.

Even there, where Christ vouchsaf'd to teach,
Their dervises dare an impostor preach. Sandys.

The dervis at first made some scruple of violating his promise to the dying brachman; but told him, at last, that he could conceal nothing from so excellent a prince. Spectator.

DE'SCANT. n. s. [discanto, Ital.]

1. A song or tune composed in parts.

Nay, now you are too flat,
And mar the concord with too harsh a descant. Shakesp.

The wakeful nightingale
All night long her amorous descant sung. Milton.

2. A discourse; a disputation; a disquisition branched out into several divisions or heads. It is commonly used as a word of censure or contempt.

Look you get a prayer-book in your hand,
And stand between two churchmen, good my lord;
For on that ground I'll build a holy descant. Shakesp.

Kindness would supplant our unkind reportings, and severe descants upon our brethren. Government of the Tongue.

To DE'SCANT. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To sing in parts.

2. To discourse at large; to make speeches: in a sense of censure or contempt.

Why I, in this weak piping time of peace,
Have no delight to pass away the time,
Unless to spy my shadow in the sun,
And descant on mine own deformity. Shakesp. Richard III.

Com'st thou for this, vain boaster, to survey me,
To descant on my strength, and give thy verdict? Milton.

A virtuous man should be pleased to find people descanting upon his actions, because, when they are thoroughly canvassed and examined, they turn to his honour. Addison.

To DESCE'ND. v. n. [descendo, Lat.]

1. To go downwards; to come from a higher place to a lower; to fall; to sink.

The rain descended, and the floods came, and the winds blew, and beat upon that house; and it fell not, for it was founded upon a rock. Matthew, vii. 25.

The brook that descended out of the mount. Deuteronomy, ix. 21.

He cleft his head with one descending blow. Dryden.

Why do fragments, from a mountain rent,
Tend to the earth with such a swift descent? Blackmore.

2. Progress downwards.

Observing such gradual and gentle descents downwards, in those parts of the creation that are beneath men, the rule of analogy may make it probable, that it is so also in things above. Locke.

3. Obliquity; inclination.

The heads and sources of rivers flow upon a descent, or an inclining plane, without which they could not flow at all. Woodward's Nat. Hist.

4. Lowest place.

From th' extremest upward of thy head
To the descent and dust below thy feet. Shakesp.

5. Fall from a higher state; degradation.

O foul descent, that I, who erst contended
With gods to sit the highest, and now constrain'd
Into a beast, and mix with bestial slime
This essence to incarnate and imbrute. Milton.

6. Invasion; hostile entrance into a kingdom: in allusion to the height of ships.

At the first descent on shore, he was not immured with a wooden vessel, but he did countenance the landing in his long-boat. Wotton.

The duke was general himself, and made that unfortunate descent upon the Isle of Rhee, which was attended with a miserable retreat, in which the flower of the army was lost. Clarendon.

Arise, true judges, in your own defence,
Controul those foplings, and declare for sense;
For, should the fools prevail, they stop not there,
But make their next descent upon the fair.
Dryden.

7. Transmission of any thing by succession and inheritance.

If the agreement and consent of men first gave a sceptre into any one's hand, that also must direct its descent and conveyance. Locke.

8. The state of proceeding from an original or progenitor.

All of them, even without such a particular claim, had great reason to glory in their common descent from Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, to whom the promise of the blessed seed was severally made. Atterbury.

9. Birth; extraction; process of lineage.

I give my voice on Richard's side,
To bar my master's heirs in true descent!
God knows, I will not do it. Shakesp.
Turnus, for high descent and graceful mien
Was first, and favour'd by the Latian queen.
Dryden

10. Offspring; inheritors; those proceeding in the line of generation.

The care of our descent perplexes us most,
Which must be born to certain woe. Milton.
From him
His whole descent, who thus shall Canaan win.
Milton.

11. A single step in the scale of genealogy; a generation.

No man living is a thousand descents removed from Adam himself. Hooker.

DESCRI'PTION. n. s. [descriptio, Lat.]

1. The act of delineating or expressing any person or thing by perceptible properties.

2. The sentence or passage in which any thing is described.

A poet must refuse all tedious and unnecessary descriptions: a robe which is too heavy, is less an ornament than a burthen. Dryden.
Sometimes, misguided by the tuneful throng,
I look for streams immortaliz'd in song,
That lost in silence and oblivion lie,
Dumb are their fountains, and their channels dry,
That run for ever by the muse's skill,
And in the smooth description murmur still.
Addison.

3. A lax definition.

The sort of definition, which is made up of a mere collection of the most remarkable parts or properties, is called an imperfect definition, or a description; whereas the definition is called perfect, when it is composed of the essential difference, added to general nature or genius. Watts

4. The qualities expressed in a description.

I'll pay six thousand, and deface the bond,
Before a friend of this description
Shall lose a hair. Shakesp Merchant of Venice.

To DESCRY'. v. a. [descrier, Fr.]

1. To give notice of any thing suddenly discovered: as, the scout descried the enemy, or gave notice of their approach. This sense is now obsolete, but gave occasion to those which are now in use.

Deservedly made vassal. Milton.
A man deservedly cuts himself off from the affections of that community which he endeavours to subvert. Addison.

DESE'RVER. n. s. [from deserve.] A man who merits rewards. It is used, I think, only in a good sense.

Their love is never link'd to the deserver,
Till his deserts are pass'd. Shakesp.
Heavy, with some high minds, is an overweight of obligation; or otherwise great deservers do, perchance, grow intolerable presumers. Wotton.
Emulation will never be wanting amongst poets, when particular rewards and prizes are proposed to the best deservers. Dryden.

DESI'CCANTS. n. s. [from desiccate.] Applications that dry up the flow of sores; driers.

This, in the beginning, may be prevented by desiccants, and wasted. Wiseman.

To DESICCATE. v. a. [desicco, Lat.]

1. To dry up; to exhaust of moisture.

In bodies desiccated by heat or age, when the native spirit goeth forth, and the moisture with it, the air with time getteth into the pores. Bacon.
Seminal ferments were elevated from the sea, or some desiccated places thereof, by the heat of the sun. Hale.

2. To exhale moisture.

Where there is moisture enough, or superfluous, their wine helpeth to digest and desiccate the moisture. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

DESICCA'TION. n. s. [from desiccate.] The act of making dry; the state of being dried.

If the spirits issue out of the body, there followeth desiccation, induration, and consumption. Bacon.

DESI'CCATIVE. adj. [from desiccate.] That which has the power of drying.

To DESI'DERATE. v. a. [desidero, Lat.] To want; to miss; to desire in absence. A word scarcely used.

Eclipses are of wonderful assistance toward the solution of this so desirable and so much desiderated problem. Cheyne.

DESIDERATUM. [Lat.] Somewhat which enquiry has not yet been able to settle or discover; as, the longitude is the desideratum of navigation. The trisection of an angle, and the quadrature of a circle, are the desiderata of geometry.

DESI'DIOSE. adj. [desidiosus, Lat.] Idle; lazy; heavy. Dict.

To DESI'GN. v. a. [designo, Lat. dessiner, Fr.]

1. To purpose; to intend any thing.
2. To form or order with a particular purpose: with for.

The acts of religious worship were purposely designed for the acknowledgment of a Being, whom the most excellent creatures are bound to adore as well as we. Stillingfleet.
You are not for obscurity design'd,
But, like the sun, must cheer all human kind. Dryden.

3. To devote intentionally: with to.

One of those places was designed by the old man to his son. Clarendon.
He was born to the inheritance of a splendid fortune; he was designed to the study of the law. Dryden.

4. To plan; to project; to form in idea.

We are to observe whether the picture or outlines be well drawn, or, as more elegant artizans term it, well designed; then, whether it be well coloured; which be the two general heads. Wotton.
Thus while they speed their pace, the prince designs
The new elected seat, and draws the lines. Dryd

5. To mark out by particular tokens: little used.

'Tis not enough to make a man a subject, to convince him that there is regal power in the world; but there must be ways of designing and knowing the person to whom this regal power of right belongs. Locke.

DESI'GN. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. An intention; a purpose.
2. A scheme; a plan of action.

Is he a prudent man, as to his temporal estate, that lays designs only for a day, without any prospect to the remaining part of his life? Tillotson.

3. A scheme formed to the detriment of another.

A sedate settled design upon another man's life, put him in a state of war with him against whom he has declared such an intention. Locke.

4. The idea which an artist endeavours to execute or express.

I doubt not but in the designs of several Greek medals one may often see the hand of an Apelles or Protogenes. Addison.
The hand strikes out some new design,
Where life awakes and dawns at every line. Pope.

DESI'GNABLE. adj. [designo, Lat.] Distinguishable; capable to be particularly marked out.

The power of all natural agents is limited: the mover must be confined to observe these proportions, and cannot pass over all these infinite designable degrees in an instant. Digby.

DESIGNA'TION. n. s. [designatio, Lat.]

1. The act of pointing or marking out by some particular token.

This is a plain designation of the Duke of Marlborough: one kind of stuff used to fatten land is called marle, and every body knows that borough is a name for a town. Swift.

2. Appointment; direction.

William the Conqueror forbore to use that claim in the beginning, but mixed it with a titulary pretence, grounded upon the will and designation of Edward the Confessor. Bacon.

3. Import; intention.

Finite and infinite seem to be looked upon by the mind as the modes of quantity, and to be attributed primarily in their first designation only to those things which have parts, and are capable of increase or diminution. Locke.

DESI'GNEDLY. adv. [from design.] Purposely; intentionally; by design or purpose; not ignorantly; not inadvertently; not fortuitously.

Uses made things; that is to say, some things were made designedly, and on purpose, for such an use as they serve to. Ray on the Creation.
The next thing is sometimes designedly to put children in pain, but care must be taken that this be done when the child is in good humour. Locke.

DESI'GNER. n. s. [from design.]

1. One that designs, intends, or purposes; a purposer.
2. A plotter; a contriver; one that lays schemes.

It has therefore always been both the rule and practice for such designers to suborn the publick interest, to countenance and cover their private. Decay of Piety.

3. One that forms the idea of any thing in painting or sculpture.

There is a great affinity between designing and poetry; for the Latin poets, and the designers of the Roman medals, lived very near one another, and were bred up to the same relish for wit and fancy. Addison.

DESI'GNING. participial adj. [from design.] Insidious; treacherous; deceitful; fraudulently artful.

'Twould shew me poor, indebted, and compell'd,
Designing, mercenary; and I know
You would not wish to think I could be bought. Southern

DESI'GNLESS. adj. [from design.] Without intention; without design; unknown; inadvertent.

DESI'GNLESSLY. adv. [from designless.] Without intention; ignorantly; inadvertently.

In this great concert of his whole creation, the designlessly conspiring voices are as differing as the conditions of the respective singers. Boyle.

DESI'GNMENT. n. s. [from design.]

1. A purpose and intent.

The sanctity of the Christian religion excludes fraud and falsehood from the designments and aims of its first promulgators. Decay of Piety.
'Tis a greater credit to know the ways of captivating nature, and making her subserve our purposes and designments, than to have learned all the intrigues of policy. Glanville.

2. A scheme of hostility.

News, lords! our wars are done:
The desperate tempest hath so bang'd the Turks,
That their designment halts. Shakesp.
She received advice both of the king's desperate estate, and of the duke's designments against her. Hayward

3. The idea, or sketch, of a work.

The scenes which represent cities and countries are not really such, but only painted on boards and canvas; but shall that excuse the ill painture or designment of them? Dryden.

When absent, yet we conquer'd in his right;
For though that some mean artist's skill were shown
In mingling colours, or in placing light,
Yet still the fair designment was his own. Dryden.

DESI'RABLE. adj. [from desire.]

1. That which is to be wished with earnestness.

Adjudged cases, collected by men of great sagacity, will improve his mind toward acquiring this desirable amplitude and extent of thought. Watts.

He cannot but confess, that it is a thing the most desirable to man, and most agreeable to the goodness of God, that he should send forth his light and his truth by a special revelation of his will. Rogers.

2. Pleasing; delightful.

She then let drop some expressions about an agate snuff-box: I immediately took the hint, and bought one; being unwilling to omit any thing that might make me desirable in her eyes. Addison.

Our own sex, our kindred, our houses, and our very names, seem to have something good and desirable in them. Watts.

DESI'RE. n. s. [desir, Fr. deseo, Ital. desiderium, Lat.] Wish; eagerness to obtain or enjoy.

Desire is the uneasiness a man finds in himself upon the absence of any thing, whose present enjoyment carries the idea of delight with it. Locke.

Drink provokes, and unprovokes; it provokes the desire, but it takes away the performance. Shakesp.

Desire's the vast extent of human mind;
It mounts above, and leaves poor hope behind. Dryden.

It is in a man's power only to observe what the ideas are that take their turns in his understanding, or else to direct the sort, and call in such as he hath a desire or use of. Locke.

To DESI'RE. v. a. [desirer, Fr. desiderare, Lat]

1. To wish; to long for; to covet.

Thou shalt not desire the silver or gold. Deut. vii. 25.

2. To express wishes; to appear to long.

Jove beheld it with a desiring look. Dryden.

3. To ask; to intreat.

Sir, I intreat you home with me to dinner,
—I humbly do desire your grace of pardon;
I must away this night. Shakesp.

But since you take such int'rest in our woe,
And Troy's disast'rous end desire to know,
I will restrain my tears, and briefly tell
What in our last and fatal night befell. Dryden.

4. To require; to demand. Not in use.

A doleful case desires a doleful song,
Without vain art or curious compliments. Spenser.

DESI'RER. n. s. [from desire.] One that is eager of any thing; a wisher.

I will counterfeit the bewitchment of some popular man, and give it bountifully to the desirers. Shakesp.

DESI'ROUS. adj. [from desire.] Full of desire; eager; longing after; wishing for.

The same piety which maketh them that are in authority desirous to please and resemble God by justice, inflameth every way men of action with zeal to do good. Hooker.

Be not desirous of his dainties; for they are deceitful meat. Prov. xxiii. 3.

Men are drowsy and desirous to sleep before the fit of an ague, and yawn and stretch. Bacon.

Adam the while,
Waiting desirous her return, had wove
Of choicest flow'rs a garland. Milton.

Conjugal affection,
Prevailing over fear and timorous doubt,
Hath led me on, desirous to behold
Once more thy face. Milton.

DESI'ROUSNESS. n. s. [from desirous.] Fulness of desire; eagerness. Dict.

DESI'ROUSLY. adv. [from desirous.] Eagerly; with desire; with ardent wishes. Dict.

To DESI'ST. v. n. [desisto, Lat.] To cease from any thing; to stop: with from.

Desist, thou art discern'd,
And toil'st in vain; nor me in vain molest. Milton.

There are many who will not quit a project, though they find it pernicious or absurd; but will readily desist from it, when they are convinced it is impracticable. Addison.

DESI'STANCE. n. s. [from desist.] The act of desisting; cessation.

Men usually give freeliest where they have not given before: and make it both the motive and excuse of their desistance from giving any more, that they have given already. Boyle.

DESI'TIVE. adj. [desitus, Lat.] Ending; concludent; final.

Inceptive and desitive propositions are of this sort; the fogs vanish as the sun rises; but the fogs have not yet begun to vanish, therefore the sun is not yet risen. Watts.

DESK. n. s. [disch a table, Dut.] An inclining table for the use of writers or readers, made commonly with a box or repository under it.

Tell her in the desk,
That's cover'd o'er with Turkish tapestry,
There is a purse of ducats. Shakesp.

He is drawn leaning on a desk, with his bible before him. Walton's Angler.

I have been obliged to leave unfinished in my desk the heads of two essays. Pope.

Not the desk with silver nails,
Nor bureau of expence,
Nor standish well japann'd, avails
To writing of good sense. Swift.

DE'SOLATE. adj. [desolatus, Lat.]

1. Without inhabitants; uninhabited.

Let us seek some desolate shade, and there
Weep our sad bosoms empty. Shakesp.

This hero appears at first in a desolate island, sitting upon the side of the sea. Broome.

2. Deprived of inhabitants; laid waste.

This city will be desolate, without an inhabitant. Jer. xxvi.

3. Solitary; without society.

To DE'SOLATE. v. a. [desolo, Lat.] To deprive of inhabitants; to lay waste; to make desert.

The island of Atlantis was not swallowed by an earthquake, but was desolated by a particular deluge. Bacon.

Thick around
Thunders the sport of those, who with the gun,
And dog impatient bounding at the shot,
Worse than the season desolate the fields. Thoms.

DE'SOLATELY. adv. [from desolate.] In a desolate manner.

DESOLA'TION. n. s. [from desolate.]

1. Destruction of inhabitants; reduction to solitude.

What with your praises of the country, what with your discourse of the lamentable desolation thereof made by those Scots, you have filled me with a great compassion. Spenser's State of Irel.

Without her follows to myself and thee,
Herself, the land, and many a Christian soul,
Death, desolation, ruin, and decay. Shakesp.

2. Gloominess; sadness; melancholy; destitution.

That dwelling place is unnatural to mankind; and then the terribleness of the continual motion, the desolation of the far being from comfort, the eye and the ear having ugly images before it, doth still vex the mind, even when it is best armed against it. Sidney.

Then your hose shall be ungartered, and every thing about you demonstrate a careless desolation. Shakesp.

My desolation does begin to make
A better life. Shakesp.

To complete
The scene of desolation, stretch'd around
The grim guards stand. Thomson

3. A place wasted and forsaken.

How is Babylon become a desolation among the nations! Jer. l. 23.

DESPA'IR. n. s. [desespoir, Fr.]

1. Hopelessness; despondence; loss of hope.

Despair is the thought of the unattainablenes of any good, which works differently in men' minds; sometimes producing uneasiness or pain, sometimes rest and indolency. Locke.

You had either never attempted this change, set on with hope; or never discovered it, stopt with despair. Sidney.

We are troubled on every side, yet not distressed; we are perplexed, but not in despair. 2 Cor. iv. 8

Wearied, forsaken, and pursued at last,
All safety in despair of safety plac'd,
Courage he thence resumes, resolv'd to bear
All their assaults, since 'tis in vain to fear. Denh.

Equal their flame, unequal was their care;
One lov'd with hope, one languish'd with despair. Dryden.

2. That which causes despair; that of which there is no hope.

Strangely visited people,
All swoln and ulcerous, pitiful to the eye;
The mere despair of surgery, he cures;
Hanging a golden stamp about their necks,
Put on with holy prayers. Shakesp.

3. [In theology.] Loss of confidence in the mercy of God.

Are not all or most evangelical virtues and graces in danger of extremes? As there is, God knows, too often a defect on the one side, so there may be an excess on the other: may not hope in God, or godly sorrow, be perverted into presumption or despair? Spratt.

To DESPA'IR. v. n. [despero, Lat.] To be without hope; to despond: with of before a noun.

Though thou drewest a sword at thy friend, yet despair not; for there may be a turning. Ecclus. xxii. 21.

We commend the wit of the Chinese, who despair of making of gold, but are mad upon making of silver. Bacon.

Never despair of God's blessings here, or of his reward hereafter, but go on as you have begun. Wake.

DESPA'IRER. n. s. [from despair.] One without hope.

He cheers the fearful, and commends the bold,
And makes despairers hope for good success. Dryden.

DESPA'IRFUL. adj. [despair and full.] Hopeless. Obsolete.

That sweet but sour despairful care. Sidney.

Other cries among the Irish savour of the Scythian barbarism; as the lamentions of their burials, with despairful outcries. Spenser.

DESPA'IRINGLY. adv. [from despairing.] In a manner betokening hopelessness or despondency.

He speaks severely and despairingly of our society. Boyle.

To DESPATCH. v. a. [depescher, Fr.]

1. To send away hastily.

Doctor Theodore Coleby, a sober man, I despatched immediately to Utrecht, to bring the moxa, and learn the exact method of using it. Temple.

The good Æneas, whose paternal care
Iülus' absence could no longer bear,
Despatch'd Achates to the ships in haste,
To give a glad relation of the past. Dryden.

2. To send out of the world; to put to death.

Edmund, I think, is gone,
In pity of his misery, to despatch
His knighted life. Shakesp.

And the company shall stone them with stones, and despatch them with their swords. Ezek. xxiii. 47.

In combating, but two of you will fall;
And we resolve we will despatch you all. Dryden.

Despatch me quickly, I may death forgive;
I shall grow tender else, and wish to live. Dryden.

3. To perform a business quickly: as, I despatched my affairs, and ran hither.

Therefore commanded he his chariot-man to drive without ceasing, and to despatch the journey, the judgment of God now following him. 2 Mac. ix. 4.

No sooner is one action despatched, which, by such a determination as the will, we are set upon, but another uneasiness is ready to set us on work. Locke.

4. To conclude an affair with another.

What, are the brothers parted?
—They have despatch'd with Pompey; he is gone. Shakesp.

DESPA'TCH. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Hasty execution; speedy performance.

Affected despatch is one of the most dangerous things to business that can be. Bacon.

You'd see, could you her inward motions watch,
Feigning delay, she wishes for despatch;
Then to a woman's meaning would you look,
Then read her backward. Granville.

The despatch of a good office is very often as beneficial to the solicitor as the good office itself. Addison.

2. Conduct; management. Obsolete.

You shall put
This night' great business into my despatch,
Which shall, to all our nights and days to come,
Give solely sovereign sway and masterdom. Shakesp.

3. Express; hasty messenger or message: as despatches were sent away.

DESPA'TCHFUL. adj. [from despatch.] Bent on haste; intent on speedy execution of business.

So saying, with despatchful looks in haste
She turns, on hospitable thoughts intent. Milton.

Let one despatchful bid some swain to lead
A well fed bullock from the grassy mead. Pope.

DE'SPERATE. adj. [desperatus, Lat.]

1. Without hope.

Since his exile she hath despis'd me most;
Forsworn my company, and rail'd at me,
That I am desperate of obtaining her. Shakesp.

2. Without care of safety; rash; precipitant; fearless of danger.

Can you think, my lords,
That any Englishman dare give me counsel,
Or be a known friend 'gainst his highness' pleasure,
Though he be grown so desperate to be honest,
And live a subject? Shakesp.

He who goes on without any care or thought of reforming, such an one we vulgarly call a desperate person, and that sure is a most damning sin. Hammond.

3. Irretrievable; unsurmountable; irrecoverable.

These debts may be well called desperate ones; for a mad man owes them. Shakesp.

In a part of Asia, the sick, when their case comes to be thought desperate, are carried out and laid on the earth, before they are dead, and left there. Locke.

I am a man of desperate fortunes, that is, a man whose friends are dead; for I never aimed at any other fortune than in friends. Pope to Swift.

4. Mad; hot-brained; furious.

Were it not the part of a desperate physician to wish his friend dead, rather than to apply the best endeavours of his skill for his recovery? Spenser's State of Ireland.

5. It is sometimes used in a sense nearly ludicrous, and only marks any bad quality predominating in a high degree.

Concluding all mere desp'rate sots and fools,
That durst depart from Aristotle's rules. Pope.

DE'SPERATELY. adv. [from desperate.]

1. Furiously; madly; without attention to safety or danger.

Your eldest daughters have foredone themselves
And desp'rately are dead. Shakesp.

There might be somewhat in it, that he would not have done, or desired undone, when he broke forth as desperately as before he had done uncivilly. Brown's Vulg. Err.

2. In a great degree; violently: this sense is ludicrous.

She fell desperately in love with him, and took a voyage into Sicily in pursuit of him. Addison.

DE'SPERATENESS. n. s. [from desperate.] Madness; fury; precipitance.

The going on not only in terrours and amazement of conscience, but also boldly, hopingly, confidently, in wilful habits of sin, is called a desperateness also; and the more bold thus, the more desperate. Hammond.

DESPERA'TION. n. s. [from desperate.] Hopelessness; despair; despondency.

Desperation
Is all the policy, strength, and defence,
That Rome can make against them. Shakesp.

As long as we are guilty of any past sin, and have no promise of remission, whatever our future care be, this desperation of success chills all our industry, and we sin on because we have sinned. Hammond.

DE'SPICABLE. adj. [despicabilis, Lat.] Contemptible; vile; mean; sordid; worthless. It is applied equally to persons or things.

Our case were miserable, if that wherewith we most endeavour to please God were in his sight so vile and despicable as men's disdainful speech would make it. Hooker.

Their heads as low
Bow'd down in battle, sunk before the spears
Of despicable foes. Milton.

All the earth he gave thee to possess and rule,
No despicable gift. Milton.

Not less even in this despicable hero,
Than when my name shook Africk with affright,
And froze your hearts beneath your torrid zone. Dryden.

All the quiet that could be expected from such a reign, must be the result of absolute power on the one hand, and a despicable slavery on the other. Addison.

When men of rank and figure pass away their lives in criminal pursuits and practices, they render themselves more vile and despicable than any innocent man can be, whatever low station his fortune and birth have placed him in. Addison.

DE'SPICABLENESS. n. s. [from despicable.] Meanness; vileness; worthlessness.

We consider the great disproportion between the infinity of the reward and the despicableness of our service. Decay of Piety.

DE'SPICABLY. adv. [from despicable.] Meanly; sordidly; vilely.

Here wanton Naples crowns the happy shore,
Nor vainly rich, nor despicably poor;
The town in soft solemnities delights,
And gentle poets to her arms invites. Addison.

DESPI'SABLE. adj. [from despise.] Contemptible; despicable; regarded with contempt. A word scarcely used but in low conversation.

I am obliged to you for taking notice of a poor old distressed courtier, commonly the most despisable thing in the world. Arbuthnot to Pope.

To DESPI'SE. v. a. [despiser, old Fr. Skinner; despicio, Lat.]

1. To scorn; to contemn; to slight; to disrespect.

For, lo, I will make thee small among the heathen, and despised among men. Jer. xlix. 15.

My sons their old unhappy sire despise,
Spoil'd of his kingdom, and depriv'd of eyes. Pope.

2. In Shakespeare it seems once to signify abhor, as from the Italian despettare.

Let not your ears despise my tongue for ever,
Which shall possess them with the heaviest sound
That ever yet they heard. Shakesp.

DESPI'SER. n. s. [from despise.] Contemner; scorner.

Art thou thus bolden'd, man, by thy distress,
Or else a rude despiser of good manners,
That in civility thou seem'st so empty? Shakesp.

Wisdom is commonly, at long running, justified even of her despisers. Government of the Tongue.

Thus the atheists, libertines, and despisers of religion, usually pass under the name of freethinkers. Swift.

DESPITE. n. s. [spijt, Dut. dépit, Fr.]

1. Malice; anger; malignity; maliciousness; spleen; hatred.

Thou wretch! despite o'erwhelm thee! Shakesp.

With men these considerations are usually the causes of despite, disdain, or aversion from others; but with God they pass for reasons of our greater tenderness towards others. Spratt.

2. Defiance; unsubdued opposition.

The life thou gav'st me first, was lost and done;
Till with thy warlike sword despite of fate,
To my determin'd time thou gav'st new date. Shakesp.

My life thou shalt command, but not my shame:
The one my duty owes; but my fair name,
Despite of death, that lives upon my grave,
To dark dishonour's use thou shalt not have. Shak.

Know I will serve the fair in thy despite. Dryd.

I have not quitted yet a victor's right;
I'll make you happy in your own despite. Dryden.

Say, would the tender creature, in despite
Of heat by day, and chilling dews by night,
Its life maintain? Blackmore.

Thou, with rebel insolence, didst dare
To own and to protect that hoary ruffian;
And, in despite ev'n of thy father's justice,
To stir the factious rabble up to arms. Rowe

3. Act of malice; act of opposition.

His punishment, eternal misery,
It would be all his solace and revenge,
As a despite done against the Most High,
Thee once to gain companion of his woe. Milton

To DESPI'TE. v. a. [from the noun.] To vex; to offend; to disappoint; to give uneasiness to.

Saturn, with his wife Rhea, fled by night; setting the town on fire, to despite Bacchus. Raleigh.

DESPI'TEFUL. adj. [despite and full.] Malicious; full of spleen; full of hate; malignant; mischievous: used both of persons and things.

I, his despiteful Juno, sent him forth
From courtly friends with camping foes to live,
Where death and danger dog the heels of worth. Shakesp.

Preserve us from the hands of our despiteful and deadly enemies. King Charles.

Mean while the heinous and despiteful act
Of Satan, done in Paradise, was known
In heav'n. Milton.

DESPI'TEFULLY. adv. [from despiteful.] Maliciously; malignantly.

DESPI'TEFULNESS. n. s. [from despiteful.] Malice; hate; malignity.

Let us examine him with despitefulness and torture, that we know his meekness, and prove his patience. Wisd. ii. 19.

DESPI'TEOUS. adj. [from despite.] Malicious; furious. A word now out of use.

The knight of the red-cross, when him he spied
Spurring so hot with rage despiteous,
'Gan fairly couch his spear. Fairy Queen.

Turning despiteous torture out of door. Shakesp.

DESPI'TEOUSLY. adv. [from despiteous.] In a furious manner: not in use.

The mortal steel despiteously entail'd
Deep in their flesh, quite thro' the iron walls,
That a large purple stream adown their gambeux falls. Spenser.

To* DESPOIL. v. a. [despolio, Lat.]

1. To rob; to deprive: with of.

Despoiled of warlike arms, and knowen shield. Spenser.

You are nobly born,
Despoil'd of your honour in your life. Shakesp.

He waits, with hellish rancour imminent,
To intercept thy way, or send thee back
Despoil'd of innocence, of faith, of bliss. Milton.

He, pale as death, despoil'd of his array,
Into the queen's apartment takes his way. Dryd.

Ev'n now thy aid,
Eugene, with regiments unequal prest,
Awaits this day of all his honours gain'd
Despoils him, if thy succour opportune
Defends not the sad hour. Philips.

2. To divest by any accident.

These formed stones, despoiled of their shells, and exposed upon the surface of the ground, in time moulder away. Woodward.

3. Simply to strip: not in use.

A groom gan despoil
Of puissant arms, and laid in easy bed. Spenser.

DESPOLIA'TION. n. s. [from despolio, Lat.] The act of despoiling or stripping.

To* DESPO'ND. v. a. [despondeo, Lat.]

1. To despair; to lose hope; to become hopeless or desperate.

It is every man's duty to labour in his calling, and not to despond for any miscarriages or disappointments that were not in his own power to prevent. L'Estrange.

There is no surer remedy for superstitious and desponding weakness, than first to govern ourselves by the best improvement of that reason which providence has given us for a guide; and then, when we have done our own parts, to commit all chearfully, for the rest, to the good pleasure of heaven, with trust and resignation. L'Estrange.

Physick is their bane:
The learned leeches in despair depart,
And shake their heads, desponding of their art. Dryden.

Others depress their own minds, despond at the first difficulty; and conclude, that making any progress in knowledge, farther than serves their ordinary business, is above their capacities. Locke.

2. [In theology.] To lose hope of the divine mercy.

He considers what is the natural tendency of such a virtue, or such a vice: he is well apprized that the representation of some of these things may convince the understanding, some may terrify the conscience, some may allure the slothful, and some encourage the desponding mind. Watts

DESPO'NDENCY. n. s. [from despondent.] Despair; hopelessness; desperation.

DESPO'NDENT. adj. [despondens, Lat.] Despairing; hopeless; without hope.

It is well known, both from ancient and modern experience, that the very boldest atheists, out of their debauches and company, when they chance to be surprised with solitude or sickness, are the most suspicious, timorous, and despondent wretches in the world. Bentley.

Congregated thrushes, linnets, sit
On the dead tree, a dull despondent flock. Thoms.

To* DESPO'NSATE. v. a. [desponso, Lat.] To betroth; to affiance; to unite by reciprocal promises of marriage.

DESPONSA'TION. n. s. [from desponsate.] The act of betrothing persons to each other.

DE'SPOT. n. s. [δεσποτης.] An absolute prince; one that governs with unlimited authority. This word is not in use, except as applied to some Dacian prince; as, the despot of Servia.

DESPO'TICAL. } adj. [from despot.] Ab-
DESPO'TICK. } solute in power; unlimited in authority; arbitrary; unaccountable.

God's universal law
Gave to the man despotick power
Over his female in due awe,
Nor from that right to part an hour,
Smile she or lowre. Milton.

In all its directions of the inferior faculties, reason conveyed its suggestions with clearness, and enjoined them with power: it had the passions in perfect subjection; though its command over them was but persuasive and political, yet it had the force of coactive and despotical. South.

We may see in a neighbouring government the ill consequences of having a despotick prince; for notwithstanding there is vast extent of lands, and many of them better than those of the Swiss and Grisons, the common people among the latter are in a much better situation. Addison.

Patriots were forced to give way to the madness of the people, who were now wholly bent upon single and despotick slavery. Swift.

DESPO'TICALNESS. n. s. [from despotical.] Absolute authority.

DE'SPOTISM. n. s. [despotisme, Fr. from despot.] Absolute power.

DESSE'RT. n. s. [desserte, Fr.] The last course at an entertainment; the fruit or sweetmeats set on the table after the meat.

To give thee all thy due, thou hast the art
To make a supper with a fine dessert. Dryden.

At your dessert bright pewter comes too late,
When your first course was well serv'd up in plate. King.

To* DE'STINATE. v. a. [destino, Lat.] To design for any particular end or purpose.

Birds are destinated to fly among the branches of trees and bushes. Ray on the Creation.

DESTINA'TION. n. s. [from destinate.] The purpose for which any thing is appointed; the ultimate design.

The passages through which spirits are conveyed to the members, being almost infinite, and each of them drawn through so many meanders, it is wonderful that they should perform their regular destinations without losing their way. Glanville.

There is a great variety of apprehensions and fancies of men, in the destination and application of things to several ends and uses. Hale

To* DE'STINE. v. a. [destino, Lat.]

1. To doom; to devote; to appoint unalterably to any state or condition.

Wherefore cease we then?
Say they who counsel war: we are decreed,
Reserv'd and destin'd to eternal woe;
Whatever doing, what can we suffer more? Milton.

All altars flame; before each altar lies,
Drench'd in his gore, the destin'd sacrifice. Dryden.

2. To appoint to any use or purpose.

Too thin blood strays into the immediately subordinate vessels, which are destined to carry humours secreted from the blood. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

3. To devote; to doom to punishment or misery: used absolutely.

May heav'n around this destin'd head
The choicest of its curses shed. Prior.

4. To fix unalterably.

The infernal judge's dreadful pow'r
From the dark urn shall throw thy destin'd hour. Prior

DE'STINY. n. s. [destinée, Fr.]

1. The power that spins the life, and determines the fate, of living beings.

Thou art neither like thy sire or dam;
But, like a foul mis-shapen stigmatick,
Mark'd by the destinies to be avoided. Shakesp

2. Fate; invincible necessity.

He said, dear daughter, rightly may I rue
The fall of famous children born of me;
But who can turn the stream of destiny,
Or break the chain of strong necessity,
Which fast is tied to Jove's eternal seat? Fairy Queen.

How can hearts, not free, be tried whether they serve
Willing or no, who will but what they must
By destiny, and can no other chuse? Milton

Had thy great destiny but given thee skill
To know, as well as pow'r to act, her will. Denham.

Chance, or forceful destiny,
Which forms in causes first whate'er shall be. Dryden.

3. Doom; condition in future time.

At the pit of Acheron
Meet me i' th' morning; thither he
Will come to know his destiny. Shakesp

DESTITUTE. adj. [destitutus, Lat.]

1. Forsaken; abandoned: with of.

To forsake the true God of heaven, is to fall into all such evils upon the face of the earth, as men, either destitute of grace divine, may commit, or unprotected from above, may endure. Hooker.

2. Abject; friendless.

He will regard the prayer of the destitute, and not despise their prayer. Psalm cii. 17.

3. In want of.

Take the destin'd way
To find the regions destitute of day. Dryden.

Nothing can be a greater instance of the love that mankind has for liberty, than such a savage mountain covered with people, and the Campania of Rome, which lies in the same country, destitute of inhabitants. Addison.

DESTITU'TION. n. s. [from destitute.] Want; the state in which something is wanted: applied to persons.

That destitution in food and cloathing is such an impediment, as, till it be removed, suffereth not the mind of man to admit any other care. Hooker.

They which want furtherance unto knowledge, are not left in so great destitution, that justly any man should think the ordinary means of eternal life taken from them. Hooker.

The order of paying the debts of contract or restitution is set down by the civil laws of a kingdom: in destitution or want of such rules, we are to observe the necessity of the creditor, the time of the delay, and the special obligations of friendship Taylor.

To DESTRO'Y. v. a. [destruo, Lat. destruire, Fr.]

1. To overturn a city; to raze a building; to ruin.

The Lord will destroy this city. Gen. xix. 14.

2. To lay waste; to make desolate.

Solyman sent his army, which burnt and destroyed the country villages. Knolles.

3. To kill.

A people great and many, and tall as the Anakims; but the Lord destroyed them before them, and they succeeded them, and dwelt in their stead. Deut. ii. 21.

'Tis safer to be that which we destroy,
Than by destruction dwell in doubtful joy.
Shakesp.

The wise Providence hath placed a certain antipathy between some animals and many insects, whereby they delight in their destruction, though they use them not as food; as the peacock destroys snakes and adders; the weazel, mice and rats; spiders, flies; and some sorts of flies destroy spiders. Hale.

4. To put an end to; to bring to nought.

Do we not see that slothful, intemperate, and incontinent persons destroy their bodies with diseases, their reputations with disgrace, and their faculties with want? Bentley.

There will be as many sovereigns as fathers: the mother too hath her title, which destroys the sovereignty of one supreme monarch. Locke.

DESTRO'YER. n. s. [from destroy.] The person that destroys or lays waste; a murderer.

It is said, that Assur both founded it and ruined it: it may be understood, that Assur the founder was the son of Shem, and Assur the destroyer was an Assyrian. Raleigh.

Triumph, to be styl'd great conquerors,
Patrons of mankind, gods, and sons of gods!
Destroyers rightlier call'd, and slayers of men.
Milton.

Yet, guiltless too, this bright destroyer lives;
At random wounds, nor knows the wound she gives. Pope.

DESTRU'CTIBLE. adj. [from destruo, Lat.] Liable to destruction.

DESTRUCTIBI'LITY. n. s. [from destructible.] Liableness to destruction.

DESTRU'CTION. n. s. [destructio, Lat.]

1. The act of destroying; subversion; demolition.

2. Murder; massacre.

'Tis safer to be that which we destroy,
Than by destruction dwell in doubtful joy. Shak.

3. The state of being destroyed; ruin; murder suffered.

If that your moody discontented souls
Do through the clouds behold this present hour,
Even for revenge mock my destruction. Shakesp.

When that which we immortal thought
We saw so near destruction brought,
We felt what you did then endure,
And tremble yet, as not secure. Waller.

4. The cause of destruction; a destroyer; depopulator: as a consuming plague.

The destruction that wasteth at noon-day.
Psalm xci. 6.

5. [In theology.] Eternal death.

Broad is the way that leadeth to destruction.
Matthew.

DESTRU'CTIVE. adj. [destructivus, low Lat.]

1. That which destroys; wasteful; causing ruin and devastation; that which brings to destruction.

In ports and roads remote,
Destructive fires among whole fleets we send.
Dryden.

One may think that the continuation of existence, with a kind of resistance to any destructive force, is the continuation of solidity. Locke.

2. With of.

He will put an end to so absurd a practice, which makes our most refined diversions destructive of all politeness. Addison.

Both are defects equally destructive of true religion. Rogers.

3. With to.

In a firm building, even the cavities ought not to be filled with rubbish, which is of a perishable kind, destructive to the strength. Dryden.

Excess of cold, as well as heat, pains us; because it is equally destructive to that temper which is necessary to the preservation of life. Locke.

DESTRU'CTIVELY. adv. [from destructive.] Ruinously; mischievously; with power to destroy.

What remains but to breathe out Moses's wish?
O that men were not so destructively foolish!
Decay of Piety.

DESTRU'CTIVENESS. n. s. [from destructive.] The quality of destroying or ruining.

The vice of professors exceeds the destructiveness of the most hostile assaults, as intestine treachery is more ruinous than foreign violence. Decay of Piety.

DESTRU'CTOR. n. s. [from destroy.] Destroyer; consumer.

Helmont wittily calls the fire the destructor and the artificial death of things. Boyle.

DESUDA'TION. n. s. [desudatio, Lat.] A profuse and inordinate sweating, from what cause soever.

DE'SUETUDE. n. s. [desuetudo, Lat.] Cessation to be accustomed; discontinuance of practice or habit.

By the irruption of numerous armies of barbarous people, those countries were quickly fallen off, with barbarism and desuetude, from their former civility and knowledge. Hale.

We see in all things how desuetude does contract and narrow our faculties, so that we can apprehend only those things wherein we are conversant. Government of the Tongue.

DE'SULTORY. } adj. [desultorius,
DESULTO'RIOUS. } Lat.] Roving from thing to thing; unsettled; immethodical; unconstant. Desultorious is not in use.

'Tis not for a desultory thought to atone for a lewd course of life; nor for any thing but the superinducing of a virtuous habit upon a vicious one, to qualify an effectual conversion. L'Estr.

Let but the least trifle cross his way, and his desultorious fancy presently takes the scent, leaves the unfinished and half-mangled notion, and skips away in pursuit of the new game. Norris.

Take my desultory thoughts in their native order, as they rise in my mind, without being reduced to rules, and marshalled according to art. Felton on the Classicks.

To DESU'ME. v. a. [desumo, Lat.] To take from any thing; to borrow.

This pebble doth suppose, as pre-existent to it, the more simple matter out of which it is desumed, the heat and influence of the sun, and the due preparation of the matter. Hale.

They have left us relations suitable to those of Ælian and Pliny, whence they desumed their narrations. Brown.

Laws, if convenient and useful, are never the worse though they be desumed and taken from the laws of other countries. Hale.

To DETA'CH. v. a. [detacher, Fr.]

1. To separate; to disengage; to part from something.

The heat takes along with it a sort of vegetative and terrestrial matter, which it detaches from the uppermost stratum. Woodward.

The several parts of it are detached one from the other, and yet join again, one cannot tell how. Pope.

2. To send out part of a greater body of men on an expedition.

If ten men are in war with forty, and the latter detach only an equal number to the engagement, what benefit do they receive from their superiority? Addison.

DETA'CHMENT. n. s. [from detach.] A body of troops sent out from the main army.

The czar dispatched instructions to send out detachments of his cavalry, to prevent the king of Sweden's joining his army. Tatler, No. 55.

Besides materials, which are brute and blind,
Did not this work require a knowing mind,
Who for the task should fit detachments chuse
From all the atoms? Blackmore.

To DETA'IL. v. a. [detailler, Fr.] To relate particularly; to particularise; to display minutely and distinctly.

They will perceive the mistakes of these philosophers, and be able to answer their arguments, without my being obliged to detail them. Cheyne.

DETA'IL. n. s. [detail, Fr.] A minute and particular account.

I chuse, rather than trouble the reader with a detail here, to defer them to their proper place. Woodward.

I was unable to treat this part of my subject more in detail, without becoming dry and tedious. Pope.

To DETAIN. n. s. [detineo, Lat.]

1. To keep that which belongs to another.

Detain not the wages of the hireling; for every degree of detention of it, beyond the time, is injustice and uncharitableness. Taylor.

2. To withhold; to keep back.

These doings sting him
So venomously, that burning shame detains him
From his Cordelia. Shakesp.

He has described the passion of Calypso, and the indecent advances she made to detain him from his country. Broome.

3. To restrain from departure.

Let us detain thee until we shall have made ready a kid. Judges, xiii. 15.

Had Orpheus sung it in the nether sphere,
So much the hymn had pleas'd the tyrant's ear,
The wife had been detain'd to keep her husband there. Dryden.

4. To hold in custody.

DETA'INDER. n. s. [from detain.] The name of a writ for holding one in custody.

DETA'INER. n. s. [from detain.] He that holds back any one's right; he that detains any thing.

Judge of the obligation that lies upon all sorts of injurious persons; the sacrilegious, the detainers of tithes, and cheaters of men's inheritances. Taylor

To DETE'CT. v. a. [detectus, Lat.]

1. To discover; to find out any crime or artifice.

There's no true lover in the forest; else sighing every minute, and groaning every hour, would detect the lazy foot of time as well as a clock. Shakesp.

Though should I hold my peace, yet thou
Wouldst easily detect what I conceal. Milton

2. To discover in general.

The utmost infinite ramifications and inoculations of all the several sorts of vessels may easily be detected by glasses. Ray.

DETE'CTER. n. s. [from detect.] A discoverer; one that finds out what another desires to hide.

Oh, heavens! that this treason were not; or not I the detecter. Shakesp.

Hypocrisy has a secret hatred of its detecter; that which will bring it to a test which it cannot pass. Decay of Piety.

DETE'CTION. n. s. [from detect.]

1. Discovery of guilt or fraud; or any other fault.

Should I come to her with any detection in my hand, I could drive her then from the ward of her purity. Shakesp.

That is a sign of the true evangelical zeal, and note for the detection of its contrary: it should abound more in the mild and good-natured affections, than in the vehement and wrathful passions, Spratt.

Detection of the incoherence of loose discourses was wholly owing to the syllogistical form. Locke.

2. Discovery of any thing hidden.

Not only the sea, but rivers and rains also, are instrumental to the detection of amber, and other fossils, by washing away the earth and dirt that concealed them. Woodward.

DETE'NTION. n. s. [from detain.]

1. The act of keeping what belongs to another.

How goes the world, that I am thus encount'red
With clam'rous claims of debt, of broken bonds,
And the detention of long since due debts,
Against my honour? Shakesp.

2. Confinement; restraint.

This worketh by detention of the spirits, and constipation of the tangible parts. Bacon.

To* DETER. v. a. [deterreo, Lat.] To discourage by terrour; to fright from any thing.

I never yet the tragick strain assay'd,
Deterr'd by thy inimitable maid. Waller.

Many and potent enemies tempt and deter us from our duty; yet our case is not hard, so long as we have a greater strength on our side. Tillotson.

Beauty or unbecomingness are of more force to draw or deter imitation, than any discourses which can be made to them. Locke.

The ladies may not be deterred from corresponding with me by this method. Addison.

My own face deters me from my glass;
And Kneller only shews what Celia was. Prior.

To* DETE'RGE. v. a. [detergo, Lat.] To cleanse a sore; to purge any part from feculence or obstructions.

Consider the part and habit of body, and add or diminish your simples as you design to deterge or incarn. Wiseman.

Sea salt preserves bodies, through which it passeth, from corruption; and it detergeth the vessels, and keeps the fluids from putrefaction. Arbuthnot.

DETE'RGENT. adj. [from deterge.] That which cleanses.

The food ought to be nourishing and detergent. Arbuthnot.

DETERIORA'TION. n. s. [from deterior, Lat.] The act of making any thing worse; the state of growing worse.

DETERMENT. n. s. [from deter.] Cause of discouragement; that by which one is deterred. A good word, but not now used.

This will not be thought a discouragement unto spirits, which endeavour to advantage nature by art; nor will the ill success of some be made a sufficient determent unto others. Brown's Vul. Err.

These are not all the determents that opposed my obeying you. Boyle.

DETE'RMINABLE. adj. [from determine.] That which may be certainly decided.

Whether all plants have seeds, were more easily determinable, if we could conclude concerning harts-tongue, ferne, and some others. Brown's Vulg. Err.

About this matter, which seems so easily determinable by sense, accurate and sober men widely disagree. Boyle.

To* DETE'RMINATE. v. a. [determiner, Fr.] To limit; to fix; to determine; to terminate: not in use.

The fly-slow hours shall not determinate
The dateless limit of thy dear exile. Shakesp.

DETE'RMINATE. adj. [determinatus, Lat.]

1. Settled; definite; determined.

Demonstrations in numbers, if they are not more evident and exact than in extension, yet they are more general in their use, and determinate in their application. Locke.

To make all the planets move about the sun in circular orbs, there must be given to each, by a determinate impulse, those present particular degrees of velocity which they now have, in proportion to their distances from the sun, and to the quantity of the solar matter. Bentley.

2. Established; settled by rule; positive.

Scriptures are read before the time of divine service, and without either choice or stint appointed by any determinate order. Hooker.

I' th' progress of this business,
Ere a determinate resolution, he,
I mean the bishop, did require a respite. Shakesp.

4. Fixed; resolute.

Like men disused in a long peace, more determinate to do, than skilful how to do. Sidney.

5. Resolved.

My determinate voyage is mere extravagancy. Shakesp.

DETE'RMINATELY. adv. [from determinate.]

1. Resolutely; with fixed resolve.

The queen obeyed the king's commandment, full of raging agonies, and determinately bent that she would seek all loving means to win Zelmane. Sidney.

In those errors they are so determinately settled, that they pay unto falsity the whole sum of whatsoever love is owing unto God's truth. Hooker.

2. Certainly; unchangeably.

Think thus with yourselves, that you have not the making of things true or false; but that the truth and existence of things is already fixed and settled, and that the principles of religion are already either determinately true or false, before you think of them. Tillotson.

DETERMINA'TION. n. s. [from determinate.]

1. Absolute direction to a certain end.

When we voluntarily waste much of our lives, that remissness can by no means consist with a constant determination of will or desire to the greatest apparent good. Locke.

2. The result of deliberation; conclusion formed; resolution taken.

They have acquainted me with their determination, which is to go home, and trouble you no more. Shakesp. Merch. of Venice.

The proper acts of the intellect are intellection, deliberation, and determination or decision. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

It is much disputed by divines, concerning the power of man's will to good and evil in the state of innocence; and upon very nice and dangerous precipices stand their determinations on either side. South.

Consult thy judgment, affections, and inclinations, and make thy determination upon every particular; and be always as suspicious of thyself as possible. Calamy.

3. Judicial decision.

He confined the knowledge of governing to justice and lenity, and to the speedy determination of civil and criminal causes. Gulliver's Travels.

DETE'RMINATIVE. adj. [from determinate.]

1. That which uncontroulably directs to a certain end.

That individual action, which is justly punished as sinful in us, cannot proceed from the special influence and determinative power of a just cause. Bramhall against Hobbes.

2. That which makes a limitation.

If the term added to make up the complex subject does not necessarily or constantly belong to it, then it is a determinative, and limits the subject to a particular part of its extension; as, every pious man shall be happy. Watts.

DETERMINA'TOR. n. s. [from determinate.] One who determines.

They have recourse unto the great determinator of virginity, conceptions, fertility, and the inscrutable infirmities of the whole body. Brown.

To* DETE'RMINE. v. a. [determiner, Fr. determino, Lat.]

1. To fix; to settle.

Is it concluded he shall be protector?
—It is determin'd, not concluded yet;
But so it must be, if the king miscarry. Shakesp.

More particularly to determine the proper season for grammar, I do not see how it can be made a study, but as an introduction to rhetorick. Locke.

2. To conclude; to fix ultimately.

Probability, in the nature of it, supposes that a thing may or may not be so, for any thing that yet appears, or is certainly determined, on the other side. South.

Milton's subject was still greater than Homer's or Virgil's: it does not determine the fate of single persons or nations, but of a whole species. Addison

Destruction hangs on every word we speak,
On every thought, till the concluding stroke
Determines all, and closes our design. Addison.

3. To bound; to confine.

The knowledge of men hitherto hath been determined by the view or sight; so that whatsoever is invisible, either in respect of the fineness of the body itself, or the smallness of the parts, or of the subtilty of the motion, is little enquired. Bacon.

The principium individuationis is existence itself, which determines a being of any sort to a particular time and place, incommunicable to two beings of the same kind. Locke

No sooner have they climbed that hill, which thus determines their view at a distance, but a new prospect is opened. Atterbury.

4. To adjust; to limit; to define.

He that has settled in his mind determined ideas, with names affixed to them, will be able to discern their differences one from another, which is really distinguishing. Locke.

5. To influence the choice.

You have the captives
Who were the opposites of this day's strife;
We do require them of you, so to use them
As we shall find their merits and our safety
May equally determine. Shakesp.

A man may suspend the act of his choice from being determined for or against the thing proposed, till he has examined it. Locke.

As soon as the studious man's hunger and thirst makes him uneasy, he, whose will was never determined to any pursuit of good cheer, is, by the uneasiness of hunger and thirst, presently determined to eating and drinking. Locke.

6. To resolve.

Jonathan knew that it was determined of his father to slay David. 1 Sam. xx. 33.

7. To decide.

I do not ask whether bodies so exist, that the motion of one cannot be without the motion of another: to determine this either way, is to beg the question for or against a vacuum. Locke.

8. To put an end to; to destroy.

Now where is he, that will not stay so long
Till sickness hath determin'd me? Shakesp.

To* DETE'RMINE. v. n.

DETE'RSIVE. n. s. An application that has the power of cleansing wounds.

We frequently see simple ulcers afflicted with sharp humours, which corrode them, and render them painful sordid ulcers, if not timely relieved by detersives and lenients. Wiseman.

To DETEST. v. a. [detestor, Lat.] To hate; to abhor; to abominate.

Nigh thereto the ever-damned beast
Durst not approach; for he was deadly made,
And all that life reserved did detest. Fairy Queen.

Glory grows guilty of detested crimes,
When for fame's sake, for praise, an outward part,
We bend to that the working of the heart Shak.

I've liv'd in such dishonour, that the gods
Detest my baseness. Shakesp.

There is that naturally in the heart of man which abhors sin as sin, and consequently would make him detest it both in himself and others too. South.

Who dares think one thing, and another tell,
My heart detests him as the gates of hell. Pope.

DETE'STABLE. adj. [from detest.] Hateful; abhorred; abominable; odious.

Beguil'd, divorc'd, wrong'd, spighted, slain!
Most detestable death. Shakesp

He desired him to consider that both armies consisted of Christians, to whom nothing is more detestable than effusion of human blood. Hayward.

DETE'STABLY. adv. [from detestable.] Hatefully; abominably; odiously.

It stands here stigmatized by the apostle, as a temper of mind rendering men so detestably bad, that the great enemy of mankind neither can nor desires to make them worse. South.

DETESTA'TION. n. s. [from detest.]

1. Hatred; abhorrence; abomination.

Then only did misfortune make her see what she had done, especially finding in us rather detestation than pity. Sidney.

2. It is sometimes used with for; but of seems more proper.

The detestation you express
For vice in all its glitt'ring dress. Swift.

Our love of God will inspire us with a detestation for sin, as what is of all things most contrary to his divine nature. Swift.

DETE'STER. n. s. [from detest.] One that hates or abhors.

To DETHRO'NE. v. a. [detroner, Fr. de and thronus, Lat.] To divest of regality; to throw down from the throne; to deprive of regal dignity.

DETONA'TION. n. s. [detono, Lat.] Somewhat more forcible than the ordinary crackling of salts in calcination; as in the going off of the pulvis or aurum fulminans, or the like. It is also used for that noise which happens upon the mixture of fluids that ferment with violence, as oil of turpentine with oil of vitriol, resembling the explosion of gunpowder. Quincy.

A new coal is not to be cast on the nitre, till the detonation occasioned by the former be either quite or almost altogether ended; unless it chance that the puffing matter do blow the coal too soon out of the crucible. Boyle.

To DETONIZE. v. a. [from detono, Lat.] To calcine with detonation. A chemical term.

Nineteen parts in twenty of detonized nitre is destroyed in eighteen days. Arbuthnot on Air.

To DETO'RT. v. a. [detortus, of detorqueo, Lat.] To wrest from the original import, meaning, or design.

They have assumed what amounts to an infallibility in the private spirit, and have detorted texts of scripture to the sedition, disturbance, and destruction of the civil government Dryden.

To DETRACT. v. a. [detractum, Lat. detracter, Fr.]

1. To derogate; to take away by envy, calumny, or censure, any thing from the reputation of another: with from.

Those were assistants in private, but not trusted to manage the affairs in publick; for that would detract from the honour of the principal ambassador. Bacon.

No envy can detract from this: it will shine in history, and, like swans, grow whiter the longer it endures Dryden.

2. To take away; to withdraw.

By the largeness of the cornices they hinder the light within, and likewise detract much from the view of the front without. Wotton.

The multitude of partners does detract nothing from each private share, nor does the publickness of it lessen propriety in it. Boyle.

DETRA'CTER. n. s. [from detract.] One that takes away another's reputation; one that impairs the honour of another injuriously.

I am right glad to be thus satisfied, in that I yet was never able till now to choke the mouth of such detracters with the certain knowledge of their slanderous untruths. Spenser on Ireland.

Whether we are so entirely sure of their loyalty upon the present foot of government, as you may imagine, their detracters make a question. Swift.

Away the fair detracters went,
And gave by turns their censures vent. Swift.

DETRA'CTION. n. s. [detractio, Lat. detraction, Fr.]

Detraction, in the native importance of the word, signifies the withdrawing or taking off from a thing; and, as it is applied to the reputation, it denotes the impairing or lessening a man in point of fame, rendering him less valued and esteemed by others, which is the final aim of detraction. Ayliffe.

I put myself to thy direction, and
Unspeak mine own detraction; here abjure
The taints and blames I laid upon myself;
For strangers to my nature Shakesp.

Fame, that her high birth to raise
Seem'd erst so lavish and profuse,
We may justly now accuse
Of detraction from her praise. Milton.

If detraction could invite us, discretion surely would contain us from any derogatory intention. Brown.

To put a stop to the insults and detractions of vain men, I resolved to enter into the examination. Woodward.

To consider an author as the subject of obloquy and detraction, we may observe with what pleasure a work is received by the invidious part of mankind, in which a writer falls short of himself. Addison.

DETRA'CTORY. adj. [from detract.] Defamatory by denial of desert; derogatory. Sometimes with to, properly from.

This is not only derogatory unto the wisdom of God, who hath proposed the world unto our knowledge, and thereby the notion of himself; but also detractory unto the intellect and sense of man, expressedly disposed for that inquisition. Brown.

In mentioning the joys of heaven, I use the expressions I find less detractory from a theme above our praises. Boyle.

The detractory lye takes from a great man the reputation that justly belongs to him. Arbuthnot.

DETRA'CTRESS. n. s. [from detract.] A censorious woman.

If any shall detract from a lady's character, unless she be absent, the said detractress shall be forthwith ordered to the lowest place of the room. Addison.

DETRIMENT. n. s. [detrimentum, Lat.] Loss; damage; mischief; diminution; harm.

Difficult it must be for one Christian church to abolish that which all had received and held for the space of many ages, and that without any detriment unto religion. Hooker.

I can repair
That detriment, if such it be, to lose
Self-lost. Milton.

If your joint pow'r prevail, th' affairs of hell
No detriment need fear; go, and be strong. Milton.

There often fall out so many things to be done on the sudden, that some of them must of necessity be neglected for that whole year, which is the greatest detriment to this whole mystery. Evelyn's Kalendar.

Let a family burn but a candle a night less than the usual number, and they may take in the Spectator without detriment to their private affairs. Addison.

DETRIME'NTAL. adj. [from detriment.] Mischievous; harmful; causing loss.

Among all honorary rewards, which are neither dangerous nor detrimental to the donor, I remember none so remarkable as the titles which are bestowed by the emperor of China: these are never given to any subject till the subject is dead. Addison.

Obstinacy in prejudices, which are detrimental to our country, ought not to be mistaken for virtuous resolution and firmness of mind. Addison.

DETRI'TION. n. s. [detero, detritus, Lat.] The act of wearing away. Dict.

To DETRU'DE. v. a. [detrudo, Lat.] To thrust down; to force into a lower place.

DEVEXITY. n. s. [from devex.] Incurvation downwards; declivity.

To DEVIATE. v. n. [de via decedere, Lat.]

1. To wander from the right or common way.

The rest to some faint meaning make pretence,
But Shadwell never deviates into sense. Dryden.

Thus Pegasus, a nearer way to take,
May boldly deviate from the common track. Pope.

What makes all physical and moral ill?
There nature deviates, and here wanders will. Pope.

Besides places which may deviate from the sense of the author, it would be kind to observe any deficiencies in the diction. Pope.

2. To go astray; to err; to sin; to offend.

DEVIATION. n. s. [from deviate.]

1. The act of quitting the right way; errour; wandering.

These bodies constantly move round in the same tracks, without making the least deviation. Cheyne.

2. Variation from established rule.

Having once surveyed the true and proper natural alphabet, we may easily discover the deviations from it, in all the alphabets in use, either by defect of single characters, of letters, or by confusion of them. Holder.

3. Offence; obliquity of conduct.

Worthy persons, if inadvertently drawn into a deviation, will endeavour instantly to recover their lost ground, that they may not bring error into habit. Clarissa.

DEVICE. n. s. [devise, Fr. devisa, Ital.]

1. A contrivance; a stratagem.

This is our device,
That Falstaff at that oak shall meet with us. Shakesp.

He intended it as a politick device to lessen their interest, and keep them low in the world. Atterbury.

2. A design; a scheme formed; project; speculation.

Touching the exchange of laws in practice with laws in device, which they say are better for the state of the church, if they might take place; the farther we examine them, the greater cause we find to conclude, although we continue the same we are, the harm is not great. Hooker.

His device is against Babylon, to destroy it. Jer li. 11.

There are many devices in a man's heart; nevertheless the counsel of the Lord shall stand. Prov. xix. 21.

3. The emblem on a shield; the ensign armorial of a nation or family.

Then change we shields and their devices bear;
Let fraud supply the want of force in war. Dryd.

Hibernia's harp, device of her command,
And parent of her mirth, shall there be seen. Prior.

They intend to let the world see what party they are of by figures and designs upon these fans; as the knights-errant used to distinguish themselves by devices on their shields. Addison.

4. Invention; genius.

He's gentle; never schooled, and yet learned; full of noble device, of all sorts enchantingly beloved. Shakesp.

1. To contrive; to form by art; to invent; to excogitate; to strike out by thought.

Whether they, at their first coming into the land, or afterwards, by trading with other nations which had letters, learned them of them, or devised them among themselves, is very doubtful. Spenser's State of Ireland.

He could by his skill draw after him the weight of five thousand bushels of grain, and devise those rare engines which shot small stones at hand, but great ones afar off. Peacham.

Ye sons of art, one curious piece devise,
From whose constructure motion shall arise. Blackmore.

2. To plan; to scheme.

Behold I frame evil against you, and devise a device against you. Jer. xiii. 11.

To DEVISE. v. n. To consider; to contrive; to lay plans; to form schemes: anciently with of.

Her merry fit she freshly 'gan to rear,
And did of joy and jollity devise,
Herself to cherish and her guest to cheer. Fairy Q.

But sith now safe ye seized have the shore,
And well arrived are, high God be blest,
Let us devise of ease and everlasting rest. Fairy Q.

Since we are so far entered, let us, I pray you, a little devise of those evils by which that country is held in this wretched case, that it cannot, as you say, be recured. Spenser's Ireland.

Devise but how you'll use him when he comes,
And let us two devise to bring him thither. Shak.

DEVISE. n. s. [devise, a will, old Fr.]

1. The act of giving or bequeathing by will.

This word is properly attributed, in our common law, to him that bequeaths his goods by his last will or testament in writing; and the reason is, because those that now appertain only to the devisour, by this act are distributed into many parts. Cowell.

The alienation is made by devise in a last will only, and the third part of these profits is there demandable. Locke.

2. Contrivance. See DEVICE.

God hath omitted nothing needful to his purpose, nor left his intention to be accomplished by our devises. Hooker.

The Romans having once debauched their senses with the pleasures of other nations, they devoted themselves unto all wickedness. Grew.

5. To curse; to execrate; to doom to destruction.

I fly
Those wicked tents devoted; lest the wrath
Impendent, raging into sudden flame,
Distinguish not. Milton.

To destruction sacred, and devote,
He with his whole posterity must die. Milton

Goddess of maids, and conscious of our hearts,
So keep me from the vengeance of thy darts,
Which Niobe's devoted issue felt,
When, hissing through the skies, the feather'd deaths were dealt. Dryden.

Let her, like me, of ev'ry joy forlorn,
Devote the hour when such a wretch was born;
Like me to deserts and to darkness run. Rowe.

DEVO'TE. adj. For devoted.

How on a sudden lost,
Defac'd, deflower'd, and now to death devote!
Milton.

DEVO'TEDNESS. n. s. [from devote.] The state of being devoted or dedicated; consecration; addictedness.

Whatever may fall from my pen to her disadvantage, relates to her but as she was, or may again be, an obstacle to your devotedness to seraphick love. Boyle.

The owning of our obligation unto virtue, may be styled natural religion; that is to say, a devotedness unto God, so as to act according to his will. Grew.

DEVOTEE'. n. s. [devot, Fr.] One erroneously or superstitiously religious; a bigot.

DEVOTION. n. s. [devotion, Fr. devotio, Lat.]

1. The state of being consecrated or dedicated.

His waving streamers to the winds displays,
And vows for his return with vain devotion pays.
Dryden

3. An act of external worship.

Religious minds are inflamed with the love of publick devotion. Hooker.

For as I passed by and beheld your devotion, I found an altar with this inscription, To the unknown God. Acts, xvii. 23.

In vain doth man the name of just expect,
If his devotions he to God neglect. Denham.

4. Prayer; expression of devotion.

An aged holy man,
That day and night said his devotion,
No other worldly business did apply.
Fairy Queen.

Your devotion has its opportunity: we must pray always, but chiefly at certain times. Spratt.

5. The state of the mind under a strong sense of dependence upon God; devoutness; piety.

Grateful to acknowledge whence his good
Descends, thither with heart, and voice, and eyes
Directed in devotion, to adore
And worship God supreme, who made him chief
Of all his works. Milton.

From the full choir when loud hosannas rise,
And swell the pomp of dreadful sacrifice;
Amid that scene, if some relenting eye
Glance on the stone where our cold reliques lie,
Devotion's self shall steal a thought from heav'n,
One human tear shall drop, and be forgiv'n.
Pope.

Devotion may be considered either as an exercise of publick or private prayers at set times and occasions, or as a temper of the mind, a state and disposition of the heart, which is rightly affected with such exercises. Law on Christ's Perfection.

6. An act of reverence, respect, or ceremony.

Whither away so fast?
—Upon the like devotion as yourselves,
To gratulate the gentle princes there. Shakesp.

7. Strong affection; ardent love; such as makes the lover the sole property of the person loved.

Be opposite all planets of good luck
To my proceeding, if, with pure heart's love,
Immaculate devotion, holy thoughts,
I tender not thy beauteous princely daughter.
Shakesp.

He had a particular reverence for the person of the king, and the more extraordinary devotion for that of the prince, as he had had the honour to be trusted with his education. Clarendon.

8. Earnestness; ardour; eagerness.

He seeks their hate with greater devotion than they can render it him, and leaves nothing undone that may fully discover him their opposite. Shakesp.

9. Disposal; power; state of dependence on any one.

Arundel castle would keep that rich corner of the country at his majesty's devotion. Clarendon.

We will say some evil beast hath devoured him. Genesis.

We've willing dames enough: there cannot be
That vulture in you, to devour so many
As will to greatness dedicate themselves,
Finding it so inclin'd. Shakesp.

So looks the pent up lion o'er the wretch
That trembles under his devouring paws. Shakesp.

2. To destroy or consume with rapidity and violence.

A fire devoureth before them, and behind them a flame burneth. Joel, ii. 3.

How dire a tempest from Mycenæ pour'd,
Our plains, our temples, and our town devour'd;
It was the waste of war Dryden.

Notwithstanding that Socrates lived in the time of this devouring pestilence at Athens, he never caught the least infection. Addison.

3. To swallow up; to annihilate.

He seem'd in swiftness to devour the way. Shak.

Such a pleasure as grows fresher upon enjoyment; and though continually fed upon, yet is never devoured. South.

Death stalks behind thee, and each flying hour
Does some loose remnant of thy life devour. Dryd.

4. To enjoy with avidity.

Longing they look, and gaping at the sight,
Devour her o'er and o'er with vast delight. Dryd.

DEVO'URER. n. s. [from devour.] A consumer; he that devours; he that preys upon.

Rome is but a wilderness of tygers;
Tygers must prey, and Rome affords no prey
But me and mine: how happy art thou, then,
From these devourers to be banished! Shakesp.

Since those leviathans are withdrawn, the lesser devourers supply their place: fraud succeeds to violence. Decay of Piety.

Carp and tench do best together, all other fish being devourers of their spawn. Mortimer.

DEVO'UT. adj. [devotus, Lat.]

1. Pious; religious; devoted to holy duties.

We must be constant and devout in the worship of our God, and ready in all acts of benevolence to our neighbour. Rogers.

2. Filled with pious thoughts.

For this, with soul devout, he thank'd the god;
And, of success secure, return'd to his abode.
Dryden.

3. Expressive of devotion or piety.

Anon dry ground appears, and from his ark
The ancient sire descends with all his train;
Then with uplifted hands, and eyes devout,
Grateful to heav'n. Milton

DEVO'UTLY. adv. [from devout.] Piously; with ardent devotion; religiously.

Her grace rose, and with modest paces
Came to the altar, where she kneel'd; and saint-like
Cast her fair eyes to heav'n, and pray'd devoutly.
Shakesp.

One of the wise men having a while attentively and devoutly viewed and contemplated this pillar and cross, fell down upon his face. Bacon.

Her twilights were more clear than our mid-day,
She dreamt devoutlier than most use to pray.
Donne.

Think, O my soul, devoutly think,
How, with affrighted eyes,
Thou saw'st the wide extended deep
In all its horrors rise! Addison.

To second causes we seem to trust, without expressing, so devoutly as we ought to do, our dependance on the first. Atterbury.

DEUSE. n. s. [more properly than deuce, Junius, from Dusius, the name of a certain species of evil spirits.] The devil: a ludicrous word.

'Twas the prettiest prologue, as he wrote it;
Well, the deuce take me if I ha'n't forgot it.
Congreve.

DEUTERO'GAMY. n. s. [δεύτερος and γάμος.] A second marriage. Dict.

DEUTERONOMY. n. s. [δεύτερος νόμος.] The second book of the law; the fifth book of Moses.

DEUTERO'SCOPY. n. s. [δεύτερος and σκοπέω.] The second intention; the meaning beyond the literary sense; not in use.

Not attaining the deuteroscopy, or second intention of the words, they are fain to omit their consequences, coherences, figures, or tropologies.
Brown's Vulg. Err.

DEW. n. s. [beap, Sax. daaw, Dut.] The moisture upon the ground.

Fogs which we frequently observe after sun-setting, even in our hottest months, are nothing but a vapour consisting of water; which vapour was sent up in greater quantity all the foregoing day, than now in the evening: but the sun then being above the horizon, taking it at the surface of the earth, and rapidly mounting it up into the atmosphere, it was not discernible: the sun being now gone off, the vapour stagnates at and near the earth, and saturates the air till it is so thick as to be easily visible therein: and when at length the heat there is somewhat further spent, which is usually about the middle of the night, it falls down again in a dew, alighting upon herbs and other vegetables, which it cherishes, cools, and refreshes. Woodward.

Never yet one hour in bed
Did I enjoy the golden dew of sleep,
But with his timorous dreams was still awak'd.
Shakesp.

That churchman bears a bounteous mind, indeed;
A hand as fruitful as the land that feeds us;
His dew falls ev'ry where. Shakesp.

She looks as clear
As morning roses newly wash'd with dew. Shak.

Dews and rain are but the returns of moist vapours condensed. Bacon.

Now sliding streams the thirsty plants renew,
And feed their fibres with reviving dew. Pope.

To DEW. v. a. [from the noun.] To wet as with dew; to moisten; to bedew.

A trickling stream of balm most sovereign,
And dainty dear, which on the ground still fell,
And overflowed all the fertile plain,
As it had dewed been with timely rain. F. Queen.

With him pour we in our country's purge
Each drop of us.
——Or so much as it needs
To dew the sovereign flower, and drown the weeds.
Shakesp.

Give me thy hand,
That I may dew it with my mournful tears. Shak.

He ceas'd; discerning Adam with such joy
Surcharg'd, as had, like grief, been dew'd in tears,
Without the vent of words, which these he breath'd. Milton.

Pulemon above the rest appears
In sable garments, dew'd with gushing tears.
Dryden.

In Gallick blood again
He dews his reeking sword, and strows the ground
With headless ranks. Philips.

DE'WBERRY. n. s. [from dew and berry.] Dewberries, as they stand here among the more delicate fruits, must be understood to mean rasberries, which are also of the bramble kind. Hanmer.

Feed him with apricocks and dewberries,
With purple grapes, green figs, and mulberries.
Shakesp.

DEWBESPRE'NT. part. [dew and besprent.] Sprinkled with dew.

This evening late, by then the chewing flocks
Had ta'en their supper on the savoury herb
Of knot-grass dewbesprent, and were in fold,
I sat me down to watch upon a bank
With ivy canopied, and interwove
With flaunting honey-suckle. Milton

DEW-BURNING. adj. [from dew and burning.] The meaning of this compound is doubtful. Perhaps it alludes to the sparkling of dew.

He, now to prove his late renewed might,
High brandishing his bright dew-burning blade,
Upon his crested scalp so sore did smite,
That to the scull a yawning wound it made.
Fairy Queen

DE'WDROP. n. s. [dew and drop.] A drop of dew which sparkles at sun-rise.

I must go seek some dewdrops here,
And hang a pearl in every cowslip's ear. Shakesp.

An host
Innumerable as the stars of night,
Or stars of morning, dewdrops, which the sun
Impearls on ev'ry leaf, and ev'ry flower. Milton.

Rest, sweet as dewdrops on the flow'ry lawn,
When the sky opens, and the morning dawns!
Tickell.

DE'WLAP. n. s. [from lapping or licking the dew.]

1. The flesh that hangs down from the throat of oxen.

Large rowles of fat about his shoulders slung,
And from his neck the double dewlap hung.
Addison.

2. It is used in Shakespeare for a lip flaccid with age, in contempt.

And sometimes lurk I in a gossip's bowl,
In very likeness of a roasted crab;
And when she drinks against her lips I bob,
And on the wither'd dewlap pour the ale. Shak.

DE'WLAPT. adj. [from dewlap.] Furnished with dewlaps.

Who would believe that there were mountaineers
Dewlapt like bulls, whose throats had hanging at 'em
Wallets of flesh? Shakesp

The dewlapt bull now chases along the plain,
While burning love ferments in ev'ry vein. Gay.

DEW-WORM. n. s. [from dew and worm.] A worm found in dew.

For the trout, the dew worm, which some call the lob worm, and the brandling, are the chief. Walton

DE'WY. adj. [from dew.]

1. Resembling dew; partaking of dew.

From the earth a dewy mist
Went up, and water'd all the ground, and each
Plant of the field. Milton.

Where two adverse winds,
Sublim'd from dewy vapours in mid sky,
Engage with horrid shock, the ruffled brine
Roars stormy. Philips.

2. Moist with dew; roscid.

The joyous day 'gan early to appear,
And fair Aurora from her dewy bed
Of aged Tithone 'gan herself to rear,
With rosy cheeks, for shame as blushing red.
Spenser

The bee with honied thigh,
That at her flow'ry work doth sing,
And the waters murmuring,
With such consort as they keep,
Entice the dewy feather'd sleep. Milton

His dewy locks distill'd Ambrosia. Milton.
Besides the succour which cold Ancien yields,
The rocks of Hernicus and dewy fields. Dryden.

My mother's blood
Runs on the dexter cheek, and this sinister
Bounds in my sire's. Shakesp.

DEXTERITY. n. s. [dexteritas, Lat.]
1. Readiness of limbs; activity; readiness to attain skill; skill; expertness.
2. Readiness of contrivance; quickness of expedient; skill of management.
His wisdom, by often evading from perils, was turned rather into a dexterity to deliver himself from dangers, when they pressed him, than into a providence to prevent and remove them afar off. Bacon.
They attempted to be knaves, but wanted art and dexterity. South.
The same Protestants may, by their dexterity, make themselves the national religion, and dispose the church-revenues among their pastors. Swift.

DE'XTEROUS. adj. [dexter, Lat.]
1. Expert at any manual employment; active; ready: as, a dexterous workman.
For both their dexterous hands the lance could wield. Pope.
2. Expert in management; subtle; full of expedients
They confine themselves, and are dexterous managers enough of the wares and products of that corner with which they content themselves. Locke.

DE'XTEROUSLY. adv. [from dexterous.] Expertly; skillfully; artfully.
The magistrate sometimes cannot do his own office dexterously, but by acting the minister. South.
But then my study was to cog the dice,
And dexterously to throw the lucky sice. Dryden.

As for any tunicles or skins, which should hinder the liver from enabling the dextral parts, we must not conceive it diffuseth its virtue by mere irradiation, but by its veins and proper vessels.
Brown's Vulg. Err.

DEXTRA'LITY. n. s. [from dextral.] The state of being on the right, not the left, side.
If there were a determinate prepotency in the right, and such as ariseth from a constant root in nature, we might expect the same in other animals, whose parts are also differenced by dextrality.
Brown's Vulg. Err.

DIABE'TES. n. s. [διαβάλης.] A morbid copiousness of urine; a fatal colliquation by the urinary passages.
An increase of that secretion may accompany the general colliquations; as in fluxes, hectic sweats and coughs, diabetes, and other consumptions.
Derham's Physico-Theology.

DIABO'LICAL. } adj. [from diabolus, Lat.]
DIABO'LICK. }
Devilish; partaking of the qualities of the devil; impious; atrocious; nefarious; pertaining to the devil.
This, in other beasts observ'd,
Doubt might beget of diabolick pow'r,
Active within, beyond the sense of brute. Milton.
Does not the ambitious, the envious, and the revengeful man know very well, that the thirst of blood, and affectation of dominion by violence and oppression, is a most diabolical outrage upon the laws of God and Nature? L'Estrange.
The practice of lying is a diabolical exercise, and they that use it are the devil's children. Ray.
Damned spirits must needs be all envy, despair, and rage; and have so much of a diabolical nature in them, as to wish all men to share their misery.
Atterbury.

DIACO'DIUM. n. s. [διακώδιον.] The syrup of poppies.

DIACO'USTICS. n. s. [διακουστικὰ.] The doctrine of sounds.

DI'ADEM. n. s. [diadema, Lat.]
1. A tiara; an ensign of royalty bound about the head of eastern monarchs.
The sacred diadem in pieces rent,
And purple robe gored with many a wound.
Spenser.
A list the coblers' temples ties,
To keep the hair out of their eyes;
From whence 'tis plain the diadem,
That princes wear, derives from them. Swift.
2. The mark of royalty worn on the head; the crown.
A crown,
Golden in shew, is but a wreath of thorns;
Brings dangers, troubles, cares and sleepless nights,
To him who wears the regal diadem. Milton.
Why should he ravish then that diadem
From your fair temples, which the hand of time
Must shortly plant on his? Denham.
Faction, that once made diadems her prey,
And stopt our prince in his triumphant way,
Fled like a mist before this radiant day. Roscom.

DI'ADEMED. adj. [from diadem.] Adorned with a diadem; crowned.
Not so, when diadem'd with rays divine,
Touch'd with the flame that breaks from virtue's shrine,
Her priestless muse forbids the good to die,
And opes the temple of eternity. Pope.

DI'ADROM. n. s. [διαδρομὴ.] The time in which any motion is performed; the time in which a pendulum performs its vibration.
A gry is one tenth of a line, a line one tenth of an inch, an inch one tenth of a philosophical foot, a philosophical foot one third of a pendulum; whose diadroms, in the latitude of forty-five degrees, are each equal to one second of time, or a sixtieth of a minute. Locke.

DIÆ'RESIS. n. s. [διαίρεσις.] The separation or disjunction of syllables; as aër.

DIAGNO'STICK. n. s. [διαγινώσκω.] A symptom by which a disease is distinguished from others.
I shall lay down some indisputable marks of this vice, that whenever we see the tokens, we may conclude the plague is in the house:—let us hear your diagnosticks. Collier on Pride.
One of our physicians proved disappointed of his prognosticks, or rather diagnosticks.
Harvey on Consumptions.

DIA'GONAL. adj. [διαγώνιος.] Reaching from one angle to another, so as to divide a parallelogram into equal parts.
The monstrosity of the badger is ill-contrived, and with some disadvantage; the shortness being fixed into the legs of one side, that might have been more properly placed upon the diagonal movers. Brown's Vulg. Errours.
All sorts of stone composed of granules, will cut and rive in any direction, as well in a perpendicular, or in a diagonal, as horizontally and parallel to the side of the strata. Woodward.

DIA'GONAL. n. s. [from the adjective.] A line drawn from angle to angle, and dividing a square into equal parts.
When a man has in his mind the idea of two lines, viz. the side and diagonal of a square, whereof the diagonal is an inch long, he may have the idea also of the division of that line into a certain number of equal parts. Locke.

DIA'GONALLY. adv. [from diagonal.] In a diagonal direction.
The right and left are not defined by philosophers according to common acceptance, that is, respectively from one man unto another, or any constant site in each, as though that should be the right in one, which, upon confront or facing, stands athwart or diagonally unto the other; but were distinguished according unto their activity, and predominant locomotion, on the either side.
Brown's Vulg. Err.

DI'AGRAM. n. s. [διάγραμμα.] A delineation of geometrical figures; a mathematical scheme.
Many a fair precept in poetry is like a seeming demonstration in the mathematicks; very specious in the diagram, but failing in the mechanick operation. Dryden.
Why do not these persons make a diagram of these cogitative lines and angles, and demonstrate their properties of perception and appetite, as plainly as we know the other properties of triangles and circles? Bentley.

DIAGRY'DIATES. n. s. [from diagrydium, Lat.] Strong purgatives made with diagrydium.
All cholerick humours ought to be evacuated by diagrydiates, mixed with tartar, or some acid, or rhubarb powder. Floyer.

DI'AL. n. s. [dial, Skinner.] A plate marked with lines, where a hand or shadow shows the hour.
O, gentlemen, the time of life is short:
To spend that shortness basely were too long,
Though life did ride upon a dial's point
Still ending at th' arrival of an hour.
Shakesp. Henry IV.
If the motion be very slow, we perceive it not: we have no sense of the accretive motion of plants or animals: and the sly shadow steals away upon the dial, and the quickest eye can discover no more than that it is gone. Glanville.

DIAL-PLATE. n. s. [dial and plate.] That on which hours or lines are marked.
Strada tells us that the two friends, being each of them possessed of a magnetical needle, made a kind of dial-plate, inscribing it with the four and twenty letters, in the same manner as the hours of the day are marked upon the ordinary dial-plate. Addison's Spectator

DI'ALECT. n. s [διάλεκτος.]
1. The subdivision of a language; as the Attic, Doric, Ionic, Æolic dialects.
2. Style; manner of expression.
When themselves do practise that whereof they write, they change their dialect; and those words they shun, as if there were in them some secret sting. Hooker.
3. Language; speech.
In her youth
There is a prone and speechless dialect,
Such as moves men. Shakesp. Meas. for Meas.
If the conferring of a kindness did not bind the person upon whom it was conferred to the returns of gratitude, why, in the universal dialect of the world, are kindnesses still called obligations? South.

DIALE'CTICAL. adj. [from dialectick.] Logical; argumental.
Those dialectical subtleties, that the schoolmen employ about physiological mysteries, more declare the wit of him that uses them, than increase the knowledge of sober lovers of truth. Boyle.

DIALE'CTICK. n. s. [διαλεκτικὴ.] Logick; the art of reasoning.

DI'ALLING. n. s. [from dial.] The sciaterick science; the knowledge of shadow; the art of constructing dials on which the shadow may show the hour.

DI'ALIST. n. s. [from dial.] A constructer of dials.
Scientifick dialists, by the geometrick considerations of lines, have found out rules to mark out the irregular motion of the shadow in all latitudes, and on all planes. Moxon.

DIA'LOGIST. n. s. [from dialogue.] A speaker in a dialogue or conference; a writer of dialogues.

DI'ALOGUE. n. s. [διάλογος.] A conference; a conversation between two or more, either real or feigned.

Will you hear the dialogue that the two learned men have compiled in p aise of the owl and cuckow? Shakesp.

Oh, the impudence of this wicked sex! Lascivious dialogues are innocent with you.
Dryden's Spanish Friar.

In easy dialogues is Fletcher's praise;
He mov'd the mind, but had not pow'r to raise.
Dryden.

To DI'ALOGUE. v. a. [from the noun.] To discourse with another; to confer.

Dost dialogue with thy shadow? Shak. Timon.

DIALY'SIS. n. s. [διάλυσις.] The figure in rhetorick by which syllables or words are divided.

DIA'METER. n. s. [διὰ and μέτρον.] The line which, passing through the centre of a circle, or other curvilinear figure, divides it into equal parts.

The space between the earth and the moon, according to Ptolemy, is seventeen times the diameter of the earth, which makes, in a gross account, about one hundred and twenty thousand miles. Raleigh.

The bay of Naples is the most delightful one that I ever saw: it lies in almost a round figure of about thirty miles in the diameter.
Addison on Italy.

DIA'METRAL adj. [from diameter.] Describing the diameter; relating to the diameter.

DIA'METRALLY. adv. [from diametral.] According to the direction of a diameter; in direct opposition.

Christian piety is, beyond all other things, diametrally opposed to profaneness and impiety of actions. Hammond.

DIAMETRICAL. adj. [from diameter.]

1. Describing a diameter.
2. Observing the direction of a diameter.

The sin of calumny is set in a most diametrical opposition to the evangelical precept of loving our neighbours as ourselves. Gov of the Tongue.

DIAMETRICALLY. adv. [from diametrical.] In a diametrical direction.

He persuaded the king to consent to what was diametrically against his conscience and his honour, and, in truth, his security. Clarendon.

Thus intercepted in its passage, the vapour, which cannot penetrate the stratum diametrically, glides along the lower surface of it, permeating the horizontal interval, which is betwixt the said dense stratum and that which lies underneath it.
Woodward.

DI'AMOND. n. s. [diamant, Fr. adamas, Lat.

The diamond, the most valuable and hardest of all the gems, is, when pure, perfectly clear and pellucid as the purest water; and is eminently distinguished from all other substances by its vivid splendour, and the brightness of its reflexions. It is extremely various in shape and size, being found in the greatest quantity very small, and the larger ones extremely seldom met with. The largest ever known is that in the possession of the Great Mogul, which weighs two hundred and seventy-nine carats, and is computed to be worth seven hundred and seventy-nine thousand two hundred and forty-four pounds. The diamond bears the force of the strongest fires, except the concentrated solar rays, without hurt; and even that infinitely fiercest of all fires does it no injury unless directed to its weaker parts. It bears a glass house fire for many days, and if taken carefully out, and suffered to cool by degrees, is found as bright and beautiful as before; but if taken hastily out, it will sometimes crack, and even split into two or three pieces. The places where we have diamonds are the East Indies and the Brasils; and though they are usually found clear and colourless, yet they are sometimes slightly tinged with the colours of the other gems, by the mixture of some metalline particles. Hill on Fossils.

Give me the ring of mine you had at dinner;
Or, for the diamond, the chain you promis'd.
Shakesp.

I see how thine eye would emulate the diamond: thou hast the right arched bent of the brow.
Shakesp.

The diamond is preferable and vastly superior to all others in lustre and beauty; as also in hardness, which renders it more durable and lasting, and therefore much more valuable, than any other stone. Woodward.

The diamond is by mighty monarchs worn,
Fair as the star that ushers in the morn. Blackm.

The lively diamond drinks thy purest rays,
Collected light, compact. Thomson.

DI'APASE. n. s. [διὰ πασῶν.] A chord including all tones. The old word for diapason. See DIAPASON.

And 'twixt them both a quadrant was the base,
Proportion'd equally by seven and nine;
Nine was the circle set in heaven's place,
All which compacted made a good diapase.
Spenser.

The sweet numbers and melodious measures,
With which I wont the winged words to tie,
And make a tuneful diapase of pleasures,
Now being let to run at liberty. Spenser.

DIAPA'SON. n. s. [διὰ πασῶν.]

Diapason denotes a chord which includes all tones: it is the same with that we call an eighth, or an octave; because there are but seven tones or notes, and then the eighth is the same again with the first. Harris.

It discovereth the true coincidence of sounds into diapasons, which is the return of the same sound. Bacon.

Harsh din
Broke the fair musick that all creatures made
To their great Lord, whose love their motion sway'd
In perfect diapason, whilst they stood
In first obedience, and their state of good. Milton.

Many a sweet rise, many as sweet a fall,
A full-mouth diapason swallows all. Crashaw.

From harmony, from heavenly harmony,
This universal frame began;
From harmony to harmony
Through all the compass of the notes it ran,
The diapason closing full in man. Dryden.

DI'APER. n. s. [diapre, Fr. of uncertain etymology.

1. Linen cloth woven in flowers, and other figures; the finest species of figured linen after damask.

Not any damsel, which her vaunteth most
In skilful knitting of soft silken twine;
Nor any weaver, which his work doth boast
In diaper, in damask, or in lyne,
Might in their diverse cunning ever dare
With this so curious net-work to compare
Spenser

2. A napkin; a towel

Let one attend him with a silver basor
Full of rose-water, and bestrew'd with flowers;
Another bear the ewer, a third a diaper.
Shakesp.

To DI'APER. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To variegate; to diversify; to flower.

For fear the stones her tender foot should wrong,
The ground he strew'd with flowers all along,
And diaper'd like the discolour'd mead.
Spenser.

Flora used to cloath our grand-dame Earth with a new livery, diapered with various flowers, and chequered with delightful objects.
Howel's Vocal Forest.

2. To draw flowers upon clothes.

If you diaper upon folds, let your work be broken, and taken, as it were, by the half; for reason tells you, that your fold must cover somewhat unseen. Peacham on Drawing.

DIAPHANE'ITY. n. s. [from διαφανία.] Transparency; pellucidness; power of transmitting light.

Because the outward coat of the eye ought to be pellucid, to transmit the light, which, if the eyes should always stand open, would be apt to grow dry and shrink, and loose their diaphaneity; therefore are the eyelids so contrived as often to wink, that so they may, as it were, glaze and varnish them over with the moisture they contain. Ray.

DIAPHA'NICK. adj. [διὰ and φαίνω.] Transparent; pellucid; having the power to transmit light.

Air is an element superior, and lighter than water, through whose vast, open, subtile, diaphanick, or transparent body, the light, afterwards created, easily transpired. Raleigh.

DIA'PHANOUS. adj. [διὰ and φαίνω.] Transparent; clear; translucent; pellucid; capable to transmit light.

Aristotle calleth light a quality inherent or cleaving to a diaphanous body. Raleigh.

When he had taken off the insect, he found in the leaf very little and diaphanous eggs, exactly like to those which yet remained in the tubes of the fly's womb. Ray.

DIAPHORE'TICK. adj. [διαφορητικός.] Sudorifick; promoting a diaphoresis or perspiration; causing sweat.

A diaphoretick medicine, or a sudorifick, is something that will provoke sweating. Watts.

Diaphoreticks, or promoters of perspiration, help the organs of digestion, because the attenuation of the aliment makes it perspirable. Arbuthnot.

DI'APHRAGM. n. s. [διάφραγμα.]

1. The midriff which divides the upper cavity of the body from the lower.
2. Any division or partition which divides a hollow body.

It consists of a fasciculus of bodies, round, about one sixth of an inch in diameter, hollow, and parted into numerous cells by means of diaphragms, thick set throughout the whole length of the body. Woodward on Fossils.

DIARRHOE'A. n. s. [διαῤῥοίη.] A flux of the belly, whereby a person frequently goes to stool, and is cured either by purging off the cause, or restringing the bowels. Quincy.

During his diarrhœa I healed up the fontanels.
Wiseman.

DIARRHOE'TICK. adj. [from diarrhœa.] Promoting the flux of the belly; solutive; purgative.

Millet is diarrhœtick, cleansing, and useful in diseases of the kidneys. Arbuthnot.

DI'ARY. n. s. [diarium, Lat.] An account of the transactions, accidents, and observations of every day; a journal.

In sea voyages, where there is nothing to be seen but sky and sea, men make diaries; but, in land-travel, wherein so much is to be observed, they omit it. Bacon.

I go on in my intended diary. Tatler.

DIA'STOLE. n. s. [διαστολή.]

1. A figure in rhetorick, by which a short syllable is made long.
2. The dilation of the heart.

The systole seems to resemble the forcible bending of a spring, and the diastole its flying out again to its natural state. Ray on the Creation.

DIA'STYLE. [διὰ, and στύλος a pillar.] A sort of edifice, where the pillars stand at such a distance from one another, that three diameters of their thickness are allowed for intercolumniation. Harris.

DIATE'SSERON. n. s. [of διὰ, and τέσσαρες four.] An interval in musick, composed of one greater tone, one lesser, and one greater semitone; its proportion being as four to three. It is called, in musical composition, a perfect fourth. Harris.

DIATO'NICK. [of διατόνος.] The ordinary sort of musick which proceeds by different tones, either in ascending or descending. It contains only the two greater and lesser tones, and the greater semi-tone. Harris.

DIAZE'UTICK Tone. [of διὰ and ζεύγνυμι.] In the ancient Greek musick, disjoined two fourths, one on each side of it; and which, being joined to either, made a fifth. This is, in our musick, from A to B.

They allowed to this diazeutick tone, which is our La, Mi, the proportion of nine to eight, as being the unalterable difference of the fifth and fourth. Harris

DI'BBLE. n. s. [from dipfel, Dut. a sharp point, Skinner; from dabble, Junius.] A small spade; a pointed instrument with which the gardeners make holes for planting.

Through cunning, with dibble, rake, mattock, and spade,
By line and by level trim garden is made.
Tusser's Husbandry

DI'BSTONE. n. s. A little stone which children throw at another stone.

I have seen little girls exercise whole hours together, and take abundance of pains, to be expert at dibstones. Locke.

DICA'CITY. n. s. [dicacitas, Lat.] Pertness; sauciness. Dict.

DICE. n. s. The plural of die. see DIE.

It is above a hundred to one against any particular throw, that you do not cast any given set of faces with four cubical dice, because there are so many several combinations of the six faces of four dice: now, after you have cast all the trials but one, it is still as much odds at the last remaining time, as it was at the first. Bentley.

To DICE. v. n. [from the noun.] To game with dice.

I was as virtuously given as a gentleman need to be, virtuous enough; swore little; diced not above seven times a week. Shakesp. Hen. IV.

DI'CE-BOX. n. s. [dice and box.] The box from which the dice are thrown.

What would you say, should you see the sparkler shaking her elbow for a whole night together, and thumping the table with a dice-box!
Addis. Guard.

DI'CER. n. s. [from dice.] A player at dice; a gamester.

They make marriage vows
As false as dicers' oaths. Shakesp. Hamlet.

Much good dich thy good heart, Apemantus.
Shakesp. Tim.

DICHO'TOMY. n. s. [διχοτομία.] Distribution of ideas by pairs.

Some persons have disturbed the order of nature, and abused their readers by an affectation of dichotomies, trichotomies, sevens, twelves, &c. Let the nature of the subject, considered together with the design which you have in view, always determine the number of parts into which you divide it. Watts.

DI'CKENS. A kind of adverbial exclamation, importing, as it seems, much the same with the devil; but I know not whence derived.

Where had you this pretty weathercock!——
I cannot tell what the dickens his name is my husband had him of. Sh. Merry Wives of Windsor.
What a dickens does he mean by a trivial sum?
But ha'n't you found it, Sir? Congr. Old Bach.

DI'CKER of Leather. n. s. [dicra, low Lat.] Ten hides. Dict.

To DI'CTATE. v. a. [dicto, Lat.] To deliver to another with authority; to declare with confidence.

The spoils of elephants the roofs inlay,
And studded amber darts a golden ray;
Such, and not nobler, in the realms above,
My wonder dictates is the dome of Jove. Pope's Od.
Whatsoever is dictated to us by God himself, or by men who are divinely inspired, must be believed with full assurance. Watts.

DI'CTATE. n. s. [dictatum, Lat.] Rule or maxim delivered with authority; prescription; prescript.

Those right helps of art, which will scarce be found by those who servilely confine themselves to the dictates of others. Locke.
I credit what the Grecian dictates say,
And Samian sounds o'er Scota's hills convey.
Prior.
Then let this dictate of my love prevail.
Pope's Od.

DICTA'TION. n. s. [from dictate.] The act or practice of dictating or prescribing. Dict.

DICTATOR. n. s. [Lat.]

DIDA'CTICAL. } adj. [διδακτικὸς.] Precep-
DIDA'CTICK. } tive; giving precepts: as a didactick poem is a poem that gives rules for some art; as the Georgicks.

The means used to this purpose are partly didactical, and partly protreptical; demonstrating the truth of the gospel, and then urging the professors of those truths to be stedfast in the faith, and to beware of infidelity. Ward on Infidelity.

DI'DAPPER. n. s. [from dip] A bird that dives into the water.

DIDASCA'LICK. adj. [διδασκαλικὸς] Preceptive; didactick, giving precepts in some art.

I found it necessary to form some story, and give a kind of body to the poem: under what species it may be comprehended, whether didascalick or heroick, I leave to the judgment of the criticks. Prior.

To DI'DDER. v. a. [diddern, Teut. zittern, Germ.] To quake with cold; to shiver. A provincial word. Skinner.

DI'DST. The second person of the preter tense of do. See DID.

Oh last and best of Scots! who didst maintain
Thy country's freedom from a foreign reign. Dryd.

DIDU'CTION. n. s. [diductio, Lat.] Separation by withdrawing one part from the other.

He ought to shew what kind of strings they are which, though strongly fastened to the inside of the receiver and superficies of the bladder, must draw as forcibly one as another, in comparison of those that within the bladder draw so as to hinder the diduction of its sides. Boyle.

To DIE. v. a. [deaz, Sax. a colour.] To tinge; to colour; to stain.

So much of death her thoughts
Had entertain'd, as died her cheeks with pale.
Milton.
All white, a virgin saint she sought the skies;
For marriage, though it sullies not, it dies. Dryd.

DIE. n. s. [from the verb.] Colour; tincture; stain; hue acquired.

It will help me nothing
To plead mine innocence; for that die is on me,
Which makes my whit'st part black.
Shakesp. Henry VIII.

We have dainty works of feathers of wonderful lustre, excellent dies, and many.
Bacon's New Atlantis.

Darkness we see emerges into light,
And shining suns descend to sable night:
Ev'n heav'n itself receives another die,
When wearied animals in slumbers lie
Of midnight ease; another, when the grey
Of morn preludes the splendour of the day. Dryd.

It is surprizing to see the images of the mind stamped upon the aspect; to see the cheeks take the die of the passions, and appear in all the colours of thought. Collier of the Aspect.

To DIE. v. n. [beadian, Sax.]

1. To lose life; to expire; to pass into another state of existence.

Thou dost kill me with thy falsehood: and it grieves me not to die, but it grieves me that thou art the murtherer. Sidney.

Nor did the third his conquests long survive,
Dying ere scarce he had begun to live. Addis. Ov.

'Oh let me live my own, and die so too!
To live and die is all I have to do. Denham.

2. To perish by violence or disease.

The dira only served to confirm him in his first opinion, that it was his destiny to die in the ensuing combat. Dryden.

Talk not of life or ransom, he replies;
Patroclus dead, whoever meets me, dies:
In vain a single Trojan sues for grace;
But least the sons of Priam's hateful race;
Die then, my friend! what boots it to deplore?
The great, the good Patroclus is no more!
He, far thy better, was foredoom'd to die;
And thou, dost thou, bewail mortality?
Pope's Homer.

3. It has by before an instrument of death.

Their young men shall die by the sword: their sons and daughters shall die by famine. Jerem.

4. Of before a disease.

They often come into the world clear, and with the appearance of sound bodies; which, notwithstanding, have been infected with disease, and have died of it, or at least have been very infirm. Wiseman.

5. For commonly before a privative, and of before a positive cause: these prepositions are not always truly distinguished.

At first she startles, then she stands amaz'd;
At last with terror she from thence doth fly,
And loaths the wat'ry glass wherein she gaz'd,
And shuns it still, altho' for thirst she die. Davies.

He in the loaden vineyard dies for thirst. Addis.

Hipparchus being passionately fond of his own wife, who was enamoured of Bathyllus, leaped and died of his fall. Addison.

6. To be punished with death.

If I die for it, as no less is threatened me, the king my old master must be relieved. Shakesp. King Lear.

What is the love of our neighbour?—
—The valuing him as the image of God, one for whom Christ died. Hammond.

7. To be lost; to perish; to come to nothing.

How now, my lord, why do you keep alone?
Of sorriest fancies your companion making,
Using those thoughtswhich should indeed have*died*
With them they think on. Shakesp. Macbeth.

If any sovereignuity, on account of his property, had been vested in Adam, which in truth there was not, it would have died with him. Locke.

Whatever pleasure any man may take in spreading whispers, he will find greater satisfaction by letting the secret die within his own breast. Spect.

8. To sink; to faint.

His heart died within him, and he became as a stone. 1 Samuel.

DI'ER. n. s. [from die.] One who follows the trade of dying; one who dies clothes.

The fleece, that has been by the dier stain'd,
Never again its native whiteness gain'd. Waller.

There were some of very low rank and professions who acquired great estates: cobblers, diers, and shoemakers gave publick shows to the people. Arbuthnot on Coins.

DI'ET. n. s. [diæta, low Lat. διαιτα.]

1. Food; provisions for the mouth; victuals.

They cared for no other delicacy of fare, or curiosity of diet, than to maintain life. Raleigh.

Time may come, when men
With angels may participate; and find
No inconvenient diet, nor too light fare. Milton.

No part of diet, in any season, is so healthful, so natural, and so agreeable to the stomach, as good and well-ripened fruits. Temple.

Milk appears to be a proper diet for human bodies, where acrimony is to be purged or avoided, but not where the canals are obstructed, it being void of all saline quality. Arbuthnot.

2. Food regulated by the rules of medicine, for the prevention or cure of any disease.

I commend rather some diet for certain seasons, than frequent use of phyisck; for these diets alter the body more, and trouble it less. Bacon.

I restrained myself to so regular a diet, as to eat flesh but once a day, and little at a time, without salt or vinegar. Temple.

3. Allowance of provision.

For his diet, there was a continual diet given him by the king. Jeremiah.

To DI'ET. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To feed by the rules of medicine.

She diets him with fasting every day,
The swelling of his wounds to mitigate,
And made him pray both early and eke late.
Fairy Queen.

Shew a while like fearful war,
To diet rank minds sick of happiness,
And purge th' obstructions which begin to stop
Our very veins of life. Shakesp. Henry IV.

He was not taken well; he had not din'd:
The veins unfill'd, our blood is cold; and then
We powt upon the morning, are unapt
To give or to forgive; but when we've stuff'd
These pipes, and these conveyances of blood,
With wine and feeding, we have suppler souls,
Than in our priestlike fasts: therefore I'll watch him
Till he be dieted to my request. Shakesp. Coriol.

I will attend my husband, be his nurse,
Diet his sickness; for it is my office. Shakesp.

Henceforth my early care
Shall tend thee, and the fertile burden ease;
Till, dieted by thee, I grow mature
In knowledge as the gods, who all things know.
Milton.

We have lived upon expedients, of which no country had less occasion: we have dieted a healthy body into a consumption, by plying it with physick instead of food. Swift.

2. To give food to.

I'm partly led to diet my revenge,
For that I do suspect the lusty Moor
Hath leapt into my seat. Shakesp. Othello.

3. To board; to supply with diet.

To DI'ET. v. n.

1. To eat by rules of physick.

2. To eat; to feed.

DIETE'TICAL. } adj. [διαιτητικὸς.] Relating
DIETE'TICK. } to diet; belonging to the medicinal cautions about the use of food.

He received no other counsel than to refrain from cold drink, which was but a dietetical caution, and such as culinary prescription might have afforded. Brown's Vulg. Err.

This book of Cheyne's became the subject of conversation, and produced even sects in the dietetick philosophy. Arbuthnot on Aliments, Pref.

To DI'FFER. v. n. [differo, Lat.]

1. To be distinguished from; to have properties and qualities not the same with those of another person or thing.

If the pipe be a little wet on the inside, it will make a differing sound from the same pipe dry. Bacon.

Thy prejudices, Syphax, won't discern
What virtues grow from ignorance and choice,
Nor how the hero differs from the brute. Add. Cato.

The several parts of the same animal differ in their qualities. Arbuthnot.

2. To contend; to be at variance.

A man of judgment shall sometimes hear ignorant men differ, and know well within himself that those which so differ mean one thing, and yet they themselves never agree. Bacon.

Here uncontroll'd you may in judgment sit;
We'll never differ with a crowded pit. Rowe.

3. To be of a contrary opinion.

In things purely speculative, as these are, and no ingredients of our faith, it is free to differ from one another in our opinions and sentiments. Burnet's Theory.

There are certain measures to be kept, which may leave a tendency rather to gain than to irritate those who differ with you in their sentiments. Addison's Freeholder.

Others differ with me about the truth and reality of these speculations. Cheyne.

DI'FFERENCE. n. s. [differentia, Lat.]

1. State of being distinct from something; contrariety to identity.

Where the faith of the holy church is one, a difference between customs of the church doth no harm. Hooker.

2. The quality by which one differs from another.

This nobility, or difference from the vulgar, was not in the beginning given to the succession of blood, but to the succession of virtue. Raleigh.

Thus, born alike, from virtue first began
The diff'rence that distinguish'd man from man:
He claim'd no title from descent of blood;
But that, which made him noble, made him good. Dryden.

Though it be useful to discern every variety that is to be found in nature, yet it is not convenient to consider every difference that is in things, and divide them into distinct classes under every such difference. Locke.

3. The disproportion between one thing and another, caused by the qualities of each.

You shall see great difference betwixt our Bohemia and your Sicilia. Shakesp. Winter's Tale.

Oh the strange difference of man and man!
To thee a woman's services are due,
My sool usurps my body. Shakesp. K. Lear.

Here might be seen a great difference between men practised to fight, and men accustomed only to spoil Hayward.

4. Dispute; debate; quarrel; controversy.

What was the difference?
——It was a contention in publick. Shak. Cymb.

He is weary of his life, that hath a difference with any of them, and will walk abroad after daylight. Sandys.

Nothing could have fallen out more unluckily than that there should be such differences among them about that which they pretend to be the only means of ending differences. Tillotson.

5. Distinction.

Our constitution does not only make a difference between the guilty and the innocent, but, even among the guilty, between such as are more or less criminal. Addison's Freeholder.

6. Point in question; ground of controversy.

Are you acquainted with the difference
That holds this present question in the court? Shakesp.

7. A logical distinction.

Some are never without a difference: and commonly, by amusing men with a subtilty, blanch the matter. Bacon

8. Evidences of distinction; differential marks.

Henry had the title of sovereign, yet did not put those things in execution which are the true marks and differences of sovereignty. Davies.

9. Distinct kind.

This is notoriously known in some differences of brake or fern. Brown's Vulg. Err.

To DI'FFERENCE. v. a. [from the noun.] To cause a difference; to make one thing not the same as another.

Most are apt to seek all the differences of letters in those articulating motions; whereas several combinations of letters are framed by the very same motions of those organs which are commonly observed, and are differenced by other concurrent causes. Holder.

Grass differenceth a civil and well cultivated region from a barren and desolate wilderness. Ray.

We see nothing that differences the courage of Mnestheus from that of Sergesthus. Pope's Essay on Homer.

DI'FFERENT. adj. [from differ.]

1. Distinct; not the same.

There are covered galleries that lead from the palace to five different churches. Addison on Italy.

2. Of contrary qualities.

The Britons change
Sweet native home for unaccustom'd air,
And other climes, where diff'rent food and soil
Portend distempers. Philips.

3. Unlike; dissimilar.

Neither the shape of faces, nor age, nor the colour, ought to be alike in all figures, any more than the hair; because men are as different from each other, as the regions in which they are born are different. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

Happiness consists in things which produce pleasure, and in the absence of those which cause any pain: now these, to different men, are very different things. Locke.

DIFFERE'NTIAL Method, is applied to the doctrine of infinitesimals, or infinitely small quantities, called the arithmetick of fluxions. It consists in descending from whole quantities to their infinitely small differences, and comparing together these infinitely small differences, of what kind soever they be: and from thence it takes the name of the differential calculus, or analysis of infinitesimals. Harris.

DI'FFERENTLY. adv. [from different.] In a different manner.

He may consider how differently he is affected by the same thought, which presents itself in a great writer, from what he is when he finds it delivered by an ordinary genius Addison.

DI'FFERINGLY. adv. [from differing] In a different manner.

Such protuberant and concave parts of a surface may remit the light so differingly, as to vary a colour. Boyle.

DIFFICIL. adj. [difficilis, Lat.]

1. Difficult; hard; not easy; not obvious. Little used.

That that should give motion to an unwieldy bulk, which itself hath neither bulk nor motion, is of as difficil apprehension as any mystery in nature. Glanville's Scepsis.

Latin was not more difficil,
Than to a blackbird 'tis to whistle. Hudibras.

2. Scrupulous; hard to be persuaded.

The cardinal finding the pope difficil in granting the dispensation, doth use it as a principal argument, concerning the king's merit, that he had touched none of those deniers which had been levied by popes in England. Bacon.

DIFFI'CILNESS. n. s. [from difficil.] Difficulty to be persuaded; incompliance; impracticability. A word not in use, but proper.

There be that in their nature do not affect the good of others: the lighter sort of malignity turneth but to a crossness, or frowardness, or aptness to oppose, or difficilness, or the like; but the deeper sort, to envy and mere mischief. Bacon.

DIFFICULT. adj. [difficilis, Lat.]

1. Hard; not easy: not facil.

It is difficult in the eyes of this people. Zachar.

2. Troublesome; vexatious.

3. Hard to please; peevish; morose.

DI'FFICULTY. adv. [from difficult.] Hardly; with difficulty.

A man, who has always indulged himself in the full enjoyment of his station, will difficulty be persuaded to think any methods unjust that offer to continue it. Rogers's Sermons.

DI'FFICULTY. n. s. [from difficult; difficulté, Fr.]

1. Hardiness; contrariety to easiness or facility.

The religion which, by this covenant, we engage ourselves to observe, is a work of labour and difficulty; a service that requires our greatest care and attention. Rogers.

2. That which is hard to accomplish; that which is not easy.

They mistake difficulties for impossibilities: a pernicious mistake certainly; and the more pernicious, for that men are seldom convinced of it, till their convictions do them no good. South.

3. Distress; opposition.

Thus, by degrees, he rose to Jove's imperial seat:
Thus difficulties prove a soul legitimately great. Dryd.

4. Perplexity in affairs; uneasiness of circumstances.

They lie under some difficulties by reason of the emperor's displeasure, who has forbidden their manufacturers. Addison on Italy.

5. Objection; cavil.

Men should consider, that raising difficulties concerning the mysteries in religion, cannot make them more wise, learned, or virtuous. Swift.

To DIFFI'DE. v. n. [diffido, Lat.] To distrust; to have no confidence in.

With hope and fear
The woman did the new solution hear:
The man diffides in his own augury,
And doubts the gods. Dryden

DI'FFIDENCE. n. s. [from diffide.]

1. Distrust; want of confidence in others.

No man almost thought himself secure, and men durst scarce commune or talk one with another; but there was a general diffidence every where. Bacon's Henry VII.

You have brought scandal
To Israel, diffidence of God, and doubt
In feeble hearts, propense enough before
To waver. Milton's Agonistes.

2. Doubt; want of confidence in ourselves.

If the evidence of its being, or but this is its true sense, be only on probable proofs, our assent can reach no higher than an assurance or diffidence arising from the more or less apparent probability of the proofs. Locke.

Be silent always when you doubt your sense,
And speak, though sure, with seeming diffidence.
Pope.

Whatsoever atheists think on, or whatsoever they look on, all do administer some reasons for suspicion and diffidence, lest possibly they may be in the wrong; and then it is a fearful thing to fall into the hands of the living God. Bentley.

DI'FFIDENT. adj. [from diffide.]

1. Distrustful; doubting others.

Be not diffident
Of wisdom; she deserts thee not, if thou
Dismiss not her, when most thou need'st her nigh.
Milton.

Pliny speaks of the Seres, the same people, with the Chinese, as being very shy and diffident in their manner of dealing. Arbuthnot.

2. Doubtful of an event, used of things; uncertain.

I was really so diffident of it, as to let it lie by me these two years, just as you now see it. Pope.

3. Doubtful of himself; not confident.

I am not so confident of my own sufficiency, as not willingly to admit the counsel of others; but yet I am not so diffident of myself, as brutishly to submit to any man's dictates. King Charles.

Distress makes the humble heart diffident. Clarissa.

To* DIFFI'ND. v. a. [diffindo, Lat.] To cleave in two; to split. Dict.

DIFFI'SSION. n. s. [diffissio, Lat.] The act of cleaving or splitting. Dict.

DIFFLA'TION. n. s. [difflare, Lat.] The act of scattering with a blast of wind. Dict.

DI'FFLUENCE. } n. s. [from diffluo, Lat.]
DI'FFLUENCY. } The quality of falling away on all sides; the effect of fluidity; the contrary to consistency.

Ice is water congealed by the frigidity of the air, whereby it acquireth no new form, but rather a consistence or determination of its diffluency; and admitteth not its essence, but condition of fluidity. Brown's Vulg. Errours.

DI'FFLUENT. adj. [diffluens, Lat.] Flowing every way; not consistent; not fixed.

DI'FFORM. adj. [from forma, Lat.] Contrary to uniform; having parts of different structure; dissimilar; unlike; irregular: as, a difform flower, one of which the leaves are unlike each other.

The unequal refractions of difform rays proceed not from any contingent irregularities; such as are veins, an uneven polish, or fortuitous position of the pores of glass. Newton.

DIFFO'RMITY. n. s. [from difform.] Diversity of form; irregularity; dissimilitude.

While they murmur against the present disposure of things, they desire in them a difformity from the primitive rule, and the idea of that mind that formed all things best. Brown' Vulg. Err.

DIFFRA'NCHISEMENT. n. s. [franchise, Fr.] The act of taking away the privileges of a city.

To* DIFFUSE. v. a. [diffusus, Lat.]

1. To pour out upon a plane, so that the liquor may run every way; to pour without particular direction.

When these waters began to rise at first, long before they could swell to the height of the mountains, they would diffuse themselves every way. Burnet's Theory.

2. To spread; to scatter; to disperse.

Wisdom had ordain'd
Good out of evil to create; instead
Of spirits malign, a better race to bring
Into their vacant room, and thence diffuse
His good to worlds, and ages, infinite. Milton.

No sect wants its apostles to propagate and diffuse it. Decay of Piety.

A chief renown'd in war,
Whose race shall bear aloft the Latian name,
And through the conquer'd world diffuse our fame. Dryden.

His eyes diffus'd a venerable grace,
And charity itself was in his face.
Dryden's Good Parson.

DIFFU'SE. adj. [diffusus, Lat.]

1. Scattered; widely spread.

2. Copious; not concise.

DIFFU'SED. participal adj. [from diffuse.] This word seems to have signified, in Shakespeare's time, the same as wild, uncouth, irregular.

Let them from forth a sawpit rush at once,
With some diffused song. Shak. M. W. of Windsor.

He grows like savages,
To swearing and stern looks, diffus'd attire,
And every thing that seems unnatural.
Shakesp. Henry V.

DIFFU'SEDLY. adv [from diffused.] Widely; dispersedly; in manner of that which is spread every way.

DIFFU'SEDNESS. n. s [from diffused.] The state of being diffused; dispersion.

DIFFU'SELY. adv. [from diffuse.]

1. Widely; extensively.

2. Copiously; not concisely.

DIFFU'SION. n. s. [from diffuse.]

1. Dispersion; the state of being scattered every way.

Whereas all bodies act either by communication of their natures, or by the impressions and signatures of their motions, the diffusion of species visible seemeth to participate more of the former operation, and the species audible of the latter. Bacon's Nat. History.

A sheet of very well sleeked marble paper did not cast distinct colours upon the wall, nor throw its light with an equal diffusion; but threw its beams, unstained and bright, to this and that part of the wall. Boyle on Colours.

2. Copiousness; exuberance of style.

DIFFU'SIVE. adj. [from diffuse.]

1. Having the quality of scattering any thing every way.

Diffusive of themselves, where'er they pass
They make that warmth in others they expect:
Their valour works like bodies on a glass,
And does its image on their men project. Dryd.

2. Scattered; dispersed; having the quality of suffering diffusion.

All liquid bodies are diffusive; for their parts, being in motion, have no connexion, but glide and fall off any way. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

No man is of so general and diffusive a lust, as to prosecute his amours all the world over. South.

The stars, no longer overlaid with weight,
Exert their heads from underneath the mass,
And upward shoot, and kindle as they pass,
And with diffusive light adorn their heav'nly place. Dryden.

Cherish'd with hope, and fed with joy, it grows:
Its cheerful buds their opening blo m disclose,
And round the happy soil diffusive odour flows.
Prior.

3. Extended.

They are not agreed among themselves where infallibility is seated, whether in the pope alone, or a council alone, or in both together, or in the diffusive body of Christians. Tillotson.

DIFFU'SIVELY. adv. [from diffusive.] Widely; extensively; every way.

DIFFU'SIVENESS. n. s. [from diffusive.]

1. Extension; dispersion; the power of diffusing; the state of being diffused.

2. Want of conciseness; large compass of expression.

The fault that I find with a modern legend is its diffusiveness: you have sometimes the whole side of a medal over-run with it. Addis. on Med.

To* DIG. v. a. preter. dug, or digged; part. pass. dug, or digged. [bic, Sax. a ditch; dyger, Dan. to dig.]

1. To pierce with a spade.

Then said he unto me, Son of man, dig now in the wall; and when I had digged in the wall, I beheld a door. Ezek.

2. To form by digging.

Seek with heart and mouth to build up the walls of Jerusalem, which you have broken down; and to fill up the mines that you have digged, by craft and subtlety, to overthrow the same. Whitgift.

He built towers in the desert, and digged many wells; for he had much cattle. 2 Chron. xxvi. 10.

3. To cultivate the ground by turning it with a spade.

The walls of your garden, without their furniture, looks as ill as those of your house; so that you cannot dig up your garden too often. Temple.

Be first to dig the ground, be first to burn
The branches lopt. Dryden's Virgil.

4. To pierce with a sharp point.

A rav'nous vulture in his open'd side
Her crooked beak and cruel talons tried;
Still for the growing liver digg'd his breast;
The growing liver still supplied the feast.
Dryden's Æneid

5. To gain by digging.

It is digged out of even the highest mountains, and all parts of the earth contingently; as the pyrites. Woodward.

Nor was the ground alone requir'd to bear
Her annual income to the crooked share;
But greedy mortals, rummaging her store,
Digg'd from her entrails first the precious ore.
Dryden's Ovid.

To* DIG. v. n. To work with a spade; to work in making holes, or turning the ground.

They long for death, but it cometh not; and dig for it more than for hid treasures. Job, iii. 21.

The Italians have often dug into lands, described in old authors as the places where statues or obelisks stood, and seldom failed of success. Addison's Travels.

To* DIG *up. v. a. To throw up that which is covered with earth.

If I digg'd up thy forefathers graves,
And hung their rotten coffins up in chains,
It would not slake mine ire. Shakesp

DI'GAMY. n. s. [δις and γαμία.] Second marriage; marriage to a second wife after the death of the first: as bigamy, having two wives at once.

Dr. Champny only proves, that archbishop Cranmer was twice married; which is not denied: but brings nothing to prove that such bigamy, or digamy rather, deprives a bishop of the lawful use of his power of ordaining. Bishop Ferne.

DI'GERENT. adj. [digerens, Lat.] That which has the power of digesting, or causing digestion. Dict

DI'GEST. n. s. [digesta, Lat] The pandect of the civil law, containing the opinions of the ancient lawyers.

I had a purpose to make a particular digest, or recompilement to the laws of mine own nation. Bacon.

Laws in the digest shew that the Romans applied themselves to trade. Arbuthnot on Coins.

To* DIGE'ST. v. a. [digero, digestum, Lat.]

1. To distribute into various classes or repositories; to range or dispose methodically.

2. To concoct in the stomach, so as that the various particles of food may be applied to their proper use.

If little faults, proceeding on distemper,
Shall not be wink'd at, how shall we stretch our eye,
When capital crimes chew'd, swallow'd and digested,
Appear? Shakesp. Henry V.

Each then has organs to digest his food;
One to beget, and one receive, the brood. Prior.

3. To soften by heat, as in a boiler, or in a dunghill: a chemical term.

4. To range methodically in the mind: to apply knowledge by meditation to its proper use.

Chosen friends, with sense refin'd,
Learning digested well. Thomson.

6. To reduce to any plan, scheme, or method.

Our play
Leaps o'er the vaunt and firstlings of those broils,
'Ginning i' th' middle: starting thence away
To what may be digested in a play. Shakesp.

6. To receive without loathing or repugnance; not to reject.

First, let us go to dinner.
—Nay, let me praise you while I have a stomach.
—No, pray thee, let it serve for table-talk;
Then, howsoe'er thou speak'st, 'mong other things
I shall digest it. Shakesp. Merchant of Venice.

The pleasance of numbers is, that rudeness and barbarism might the better taste and digest the lessons of civility. Peacham.

7. To receive and enjoy.

Cornwal and Albany,
With my two daughters dowers, digest the third.
Shakesp.

8. [In chirurgery.] To dispose a wound to generate pus in order to a cure.

To DIGE'ST. v. n. To generate matter, as a wound, and tend to a cure.

DIGE'STER. n. s. [from digest.]

1. He that digests or disposes.

2. He that digests or concocts his food.

People that are bilious and fat, rather than lean, are great eaters and ill digesters. Arbuthnot

3. A strong vessel or engine, contrived by M. Papin, wherein to boil, with a very strong heat, any bony substances, so as to reduce them into a fluid state. Quincy.

That which causes or strengthens the concoctive power.

Rice is of excellent use for all illnesses of the stomach, a great restorer of health, and a great digester. Temple.

DIGE'STIBLE. adj. [from digest.] That which is capable of being digested or concocted in the stomach.

Those medicines that purge by stool are, at the first, not digestible by the stomach, and therefore move immediately downwards to the guts. Bacon's Nat. History.

DIGE'STION. n. s. [from digest.]

1. The act of digestion or concocting food in the stomach.

Now good digestion wait on appetite,
And health on both. Shakesp. Macbeth.

Diges.ion is a fermentation begun, because there are all the requisites of such a fermentation; heat, air, and motion: but it is not a complete fermentation, because that requires a greater time than the continuance of the aliment in the stomach: vegetable putrefaction resembles very much animal digestion. Arbuthnot on Aliments

Quantity of food cannot be determined by measures and weights, or any general Lessian rules; but must vary with the vigour of decays of age or of health, and the use or disuse of air or of exercise, with the changes of appetite; and then, by what every man may find or suspect of the present strength or weakness of digestion. Temple.

Every morsel to a satisfied hunger, is only a new labour to a tired digestion. South.

2. The preparation of matter by a chemical heat.

We conceive, indeed, that a perfect good concoction, or digestion, or maturation of some metals, will produce gold. Bacon's Nat. History.

Did chymick chance the furnaces prepare,
Raise all the labour-houses of the air,
And lay crude vapours in digestion there? Blackmore.

3. Reduction to a plan; the act of methodising; the maturation of a design.

The digestion of the counsels in Sweden is made in senate, consisting of forty counsellors, who are generally the greatest men. Temple.

4. The act of disposing a wound to generate matter.

5. The disposition of a wound or sore to generate matter.

The first stage of healing, or the discharge of matter, is by surgeons called digestion. Sharp's Surgery.

DIGE'STIVE. adj. [from digest.]

1. Having the power to cause digestion, or to strengthen the stomach.

A chilifactory menstruum, or a digestive preparation, drawn from species or individuals, whose stomachs peculiarly dissolve lapideous bodies. Brown's Vulg. Errours.

2. Capable by heat to soften and subdue.

The earth and sun were in that very state; the one active, piercing, and digestive, by its heat; the other passive, receptive, and stored with materials for such a production. Hale.

3. Methodizing; adjusting.

To business, ripen'd by digestive thought,
This future rule is into method brought. Dryden.

DIGE'STIVE. n. s. [from digest.] An application which disposes a wound to generate matter.

I dressed it with digestives. Wisem. on Abscesses.

DIGE'STURE. n. s. Concoction: not used.

Neither tie yourself always to eat meats of easy digesture; such as veal, sweetbreads. Harvey.

DI'GGER. n. s. [from dig.] One that opens the ground with a spade.

When we visited mines, we have been told by diggers, that even when the sky seemed clear, there would suddenly arise a steam so thick, that it would put out their candles. Boyle.

To DI'GHT. v. a. [dihtan to prepare, to regulate, Sax.]

1. To dress; to deck; to bedeck; to embellish; to adorn. It seems always to signify the past; the particle passive is dight, as dighted in Hudibras is perhaps improper.

Let my due feet never fail
To walk the studious cloisters pale;
And love the high embowed roof,
With antick pillar, massy proof;
And storied windows richly dight,
Casting a dim religious light. Milton.

Just so the proud insulting lass
Array'd and dighted Hudibras. Hudibras.

2. To put on.

On his head his dreadful hat he dight,
Which maketh him invisible to sight. Hub. Tale.

DI'GIT. n. s. [digitus, Lat.]

1. The measure of length containing three fourths of an inch.

If the inverted tube of mercury be but twenty-five digits high, or somewhat more, the quicksilver will not fall, but remain suspended in the tube, because it cannot press the subjacent mercury with so great a force as doth the incumbent cylinder of the air, reaching thence to the top of the atmosphere. Boyle's Spring of the Air.

2. The twelfth part of the diameter of the sun or moon.

3. Any of the numbers expressed by single figures; any number to ten; so called from counting upon the fingers.

Not only the numbers seven and nine, from considerations abstruse, have been extolled by most, but all or most of other digits have been as mystically applauded. Brown's Vulg. Errours.

DI'GITATED. adj. [from digitus, Lat.] Branched out into divisions like fingers; as a digitated leaf is a leaf composed of many small leaves.

For animals multifidous, or such as are digitated, or have several divisions in their feet, there are but two that are uniparous; that is, men and elephants. Brown's Vulg. Errours.

DIGLADIA'TION. n. s. [digladiatio, Lat.] A combat with swords; any quarrel or contest.

Aristotle seems purposely to intend the cherishing of controversial digladiations, by his own affection of an intricate obscurity. Glanville's Scep.

DI'GNIFIED. adj. [from dignify.] Invested with some dignity: it is used chiefly of the clergy.

Abbots are stiled dignified clerks, as having some dignity in the church. Ayliffe's Parergon.

DIGNIFICA'TION. n. s. [from dignify.] Exaltation.

I grant that where a noble and ancient descent and merit meet in any man, it is a double dignification of that person. Walton's Angler.

To DI'GNIFY. v. a. [from dignus and facio, Lat.]

1. To advance; to prefer; to exalt. Used chiefly of the clergy.

2. To honour; to adorn; to give lustre to; to improve by some adventitious excellence, or honourable distinction.

Such a day,
So fought, so follow'd, and so fairly won,
Came not till now to dignify the times
Since Cæsar's fortunes! Shakesp. Henry IV.

Not that we think us worthy such a guest,
But that your worth will dignify our feast.
Ben Jonson.

No turbots dignify my boards;
But gudgeons, flounders, what my Thames affords.
Pope.

DI'GNITARY. n. s. [from dignus, Lat.] A clergyman advanced to some dignity, to some rank above that of a parochial priest.

If there be any dignitaries, whose preferments are perhaps not liable to the accusation of superfluity, they may be persons of superior merit. Swift.

DI'GNITY. n. s. [dignitas, Lat.]

1. Rank of elevation.

Angels are not any where spoken so highly of as our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, and are not in dignity equal to him. Hooker.

2. Grandeur of mein; elevation of aspect.

Some men have a native dignity, which will procure them more regard by a look, than others can obtain by the most imperious commands. Clarissa.

3. Advancement; preferment; high place.

Faster than spring-time show'rs comes thought on thought,
And not a thought but thinks on dignity. Shak.

For those of old,
And these late dignities heap'd up to them. Shak.

4. [Among ecclesiasticks] By a dignity we understand that promotion or preferment to which any jurisdiction is annexed. Ayliffe's Parergon.

5. Maxims; general principles: κυριαὶ δόξαι.

The sciences concluding from dignities, and principles known by themselves, receive not satisfaction from probable reasons, much less from bare asseverations. Brown.

6. [In astrology.] The planet is in dignity when it is in any sign.

DIGNO'TION. n. s. [from dignosco, Lat.] Distinction; distinguishing mark.

That temperamental dignotions, and conjecture of prevalent humours, may be collected from spots in our nails, we are not averse to concede. Brown's Vulg. Errours.

To DIGRE'SS. v. n. [digressus, Lat.]

1. To turn aside out of the road.

2. To depart from the main design of a discourse, or chief tenour of an argument.

In the pursuit of an argument there is hardly room to digress into a particular definition, as often as a man varies the signification of any term. Locke.

3. To wander; to expatiate.

It seemeth (to digress no farther) that the Tartarians, spreading so far, cannot be the Israelites. Brerewood.

4. To go out of the right way, or common track; to transgress; to deviate: not in use.

I am come to keep my word,
Though in some part am forced to digress,
Which at more leisure I will so excuse
As you shall well be satisfied. Shakesp.

Thy noble shape is but a form of wax,
Digressing from the valour of a man. Shakesp.

DIGRE'SSION. n. s. [digressio, Lat.]

1. A passage deviating from the main tenour or design of a discourse.

The good man thought so much of his late conceived commonwealth, that all other matters were but digressions to him. Sidney.

He, she knew, would intermix
Grateful digressions, and solve high dispute
With conjugal caresses. Milton.

Here some digression I must make, t' accuse
Thee, my forgetful and ungrateful muse. Denham.

To content and fill the eye of the understanding, the best authors sprinkle their works with pleasing digressions, with which they recreate the minds of their readers. Dryden.

2. Deviation.

The digression of the sun is not equal; but, near the equinoctial intersections, it is right and greater, near the solstices, more oblique and lesser. Brown's Vulg. Errours.

DIJUDICA'TION. n. s. [dijudicatio, Lat.] Judicial distinction.

DIKE. n. s. [δικ, Sax. dyk, Erse.]

1. A channel to receive water.

The dykes are fill'd, and with a roaring sound
The rising rivers float the nether ground.
Dryden's Virg.

The king of dykes! than whom no sluice of mud
With deeper sable blots the silver flood.
Pope's Dunciad.

2. A mound to hinder inundations.

God, that breaks up the flood-gates of so great a deluge, and all the art and industry of man is not sufficient to raise up dykes and ramparts against it. Cowley.

To DILA'CERATE. v. a. [dilacero, Lat.] To tear; to rend; to force in two.

The infant, at the accomplished period, struggling to come forth, dilacerates and breaks those parts which restrained him before.
Brown's Vulg. Errours.

DILACERA'TION. n. s. [from dilaceratio, Lat.] The act of rending in two

The greatest sensation of pain is by the obstruction of the small vessels, and dilaceration of the nervous fibres. Arbuthnot.

To DILA'NIATE. v. a. [dilanio, Lat.] To tear; to rend in pieces.

Rather than they would dilaniate the entrails of their own mother, and expose her thereby to be ravished, they met half way in a gallant kind.
Howel's Eng. Tears.

To DILA'PIDATE. v. n. [dilapido, Lat.] To go to ruin; to fall by decay.

DILA'PIDATION. n. s. [dilapidatio, Lat.] The incumbent's suffering the chancel, or any other edifices of his ecclesiastical living, to go to ruin or decay, by neglecting to repair the same: and it likewise extends to his committing, or suffering to be committed, any wilful waste in or upon the glebe-woods, or any other inheritance of the church.
Ayliffe's Parergon.

'Tis the duty of all church-wardens to prevent the dilapidations of the chancel and mansion-house belonging to the rector or vicar. Ayliffe's Parer.

DILATABI'LITY. n. s. [from dilatable.] The quality of admitting extension.

We take notice of the wonderful dilatability or extensiveness of the gullets of serpents: I have taken two adult mice out of the stomach of an adder, whose neck was not bigger than my little finger. Ray.

By this continual contractibility and dilatability, by different degrees of heat, the air is kept in a constant motion. Arbuthnot.

DILATA'BLE. adj. [from dilate.] Capable of extension.

The windpipe divides itself into a great number of branches called bronchia: these end in small air bladders, dilatable and contractible, capable to be inflated by the admission of air, and to subside at the expulsion of it.
Arbuthnot on Aliments.

DILATA'TION. n. s. [from dilatatio, Lat.]

1. The act of extending into greater space: opposed to contraction.

The motions of the tongue, by contraction and dilatation, are so easy and so subtle, that you can hardly conceive or distinguish them aright.
Holder.

2. The state of being extended; the state in which the parts are at more distance from each other.

Joy causeth a cheerfulness and vigour in the eyes; singing, leaping, dancing, and sometimes tears: all these are the effects of the dilatation, and coming forth of the spirits into the outward parts. Bacon's Nat. History

The image of the sun should be drawn out into an oblong form, either by a dilatation of every ray, or by any other casual inequality of the refractions. Newton.

To DILATE. v. a. [dilato, Lat.]

1. To extend; to spread out; to enlarge: opposed to contract.

But ye thereby much greater glory gate,
Than had ye sorted with a prince's peer,
For now your light doth more itself dilate,
And in my darkness greater doth appear. Spenser

Satan alarm'd,
Collecting all his might, dilated stood,
Like Teneriff, or Atlas, unremov'd. Milton.

Opener of mine eyes,
Dim erst; dilated spirits, ampler heart,
And growing up to godhead which for thee
Chiefly I sought, without thee can despise. Milt

Through all the air his sounding strings dilate
Sorrow, like that which touch'd our hearts of late. Waller.

Diffus'd, it rises in a higher sphere;
Dilates its drops, and softens it to air. Prior

I mark the various fury of the winds;
These neither seasons guide, nor order binds.
They now dilate and now contract their force,
Various their speed, but endless is their course.
Prior.

The second refraction would spread the rays one way as much as the first doth another, and so dilate the image in breadth as much as the first doth in length. Newton.

2. To relate at large; to tell diffusely and copiously.

But he would not endure that woful theam
For to dilate at large; but urged sore,
With piercing words, and pitiful implore,
Him hasty to arise. Fairy Queen.

Observing,
Took once a pliant hour, and found good means
To draw from her a prayer of earnest heart,
That I would all my pilgrimage dilate,
Whereof by parcels she had something heard,
But not distinctively. Shakesp. Othello.

To DILA'TE. v. n.

1. To widen; to grow wide.

His heart dilates and glories in his strength.
Addison.

2. To speak largely and copiously.

It may be behoveful for princes, in matters of grace, to transact the same publickly, and by themselves; or their ministers to dilate upon it, and improve their lustre, by any addition or eloquence of speech. Clarendon.

DILA'TOR. n. s. [from dilate.] That which widens or extends.

The buccinatores, or drowers up of the cheeks, and the dilators of the nose, are too strong in cholerick people. Arbuthnot.

DI'LATORINESS. n. s. [from dilatory.] The quality of being dilatory; slowness; sluggishness.

DI'LATORY. adj. [dilatoire, Fr. dilatorius, Lat.] Tardy; slow; given to procrastination; addicted to delay; sluggish; loitering.

An inferior council, after former tedious suits in a higher court, would be but dilatory, and so to little purpose. Hayward.

What wound did ever heal but by degrees?
Thou know'st we work by wit, and not by witchcraft;
And wit depends on dilatory time. Shak. Othello.

These cardinals trifle with me; I abhor
This dilatory sloth, and tricks of Rome.
Shakesp. Henry VIII.

Dilatory fortune plays the jilt
With the brave, noble, honest, gallant man,
To throw herself away on fools and knaves.
Otway.

A dilatory temper commits innumerable cruelties without design. Addison's Spectator.

DILE'CTION. n. s. [dilectio, Lat.] The act of loving; kindness.

So free is Christ's dilection, that the grand condition of our felicity is our belief.
Boyle's Seraphic Love.

DILE'MMA. n. s. [διλημμα.]

1. An argument equally conclusive by contrary suppositions. A young rhetorician applied to an old sophist to be taught the art of pleading, and bargained for a certain reward to be paid, when he should gain a cause. The master sued for his reward, and the scholar endeavoured to elude his claim by a dilemma: If I gain my cause, I shall withhold your pay, because the judge's award will be against you; if I lose it, I may withhold it, because I shall not yet have gained a cause. On the contrary, says the master, if you gain your cause, you must pay me, because you are to pay me when you gain a cause; if you lose it, you must pay me, because the judge will award it.

A dilemma, that Morton used to raise benevolence, some called his fork, and some his crotch.
Bacon's Henry VII.

Hope, whose weak being ruin'd is
Alike if it succeed, and if it miss;
Whom good or ill does equally confound,
And both the horns of fate's dilemma wound Cowl.

2. A difficult or doubtful choice; a vexatious alternative.

A strong dilemma in a desp'rate case!
To act with infamy, or quit the place. Swift.

A dire dilemma; either way I'm sped;
If foes they write, if friends they read, me dead.
Pope.

DI'LIGENCE. n. s. [diligentia, Lat.] Industry; assiduity; constancy in business; continuance of endeavour; unintermitted application; the contrary to idleness.

Do thy diligence to come shortly unto me. 2 Tim. iv. 9.

Brethren, give diligence to make your calling and election sure. 2 Pet. i. 10.

DI'LIGENT. adj. [diligens, Lat.]

For her true form how can my spark discern,
Which, dim by nature, art did never clear? Davies.

2. Dull of apprehension.

The understanding is dim, and cannot by its natural light discover spiritual truths. Rogers

3. Not clearly seen; obscure, imperfectly discovered.

We might be able to aim at some dim and seeming conception, how matter might begin to exist by the power of that eternal first Being. Locke.

Something, as dim to our internal view,
Is thus perhaps the cause of all we do. Pope.

4. Obstructing the act of vision; not luminous; somewhat dark.

Her face right wond'rous fair did seem to be,
That her broad beauty's beam great brightness threw
Through the dim shade, that all men might it see. Spenser.

To DIM. v. a. [from the adjective.]

1. To cloud; to darken; to hinder from a full perception of light, and free exercise of vision.

As where the Almighty's lightning brand does light,
It dims the dazed eyen, and daunts the senses quite. Spenser's F. Queen.

It hath been observed by the ancients, that much use of Venus doth dim the sight; and yet eunuchs, which are unable to generate, are nevertheless also dim sighted. Bacon.

Every one declares against blindness, and yet who almost is not fond of that which dims his sight? Locke.

For thee I dim these eyes, and stuff this head,
With all such reading as was never read. Pope's Dunciad.

2. To make less bright; to obscure.

A ship that through the ocean wide,
By conduct of some star, doth make her way,
When as a storm hath dimm'd her trusty guide,
Out of her course doth wander far astray. Spenser.

All of us have cause
To wail the dimming of our shining star. Shakesp. Richard III.

Thus while he spake, each passion dimm'd his face,
Thrice chang'd. Milton.

The principal figure in a picture is like a king among his courtiers, who dims all his attendants. Dryden.

DIME'NSION. n. s. [dimensio, Lat.] Space contained in any thing; bulk; extent; capacity. It is seldom used but in the plural. The three dimensions are length, breadth, and depth.

That we call good which is apt to cause or increase pleasure, or diminish pain in us. Locke

2. To impair; to lessen; to degrade.

Impiously they thought
Thee to diminish, and from thee withdraw
The number of thy worshippers. Milton.

3. To take any thing from that to which it belongs: the contrary to add.

Nothing was diminished from the safety of the king by the imprisonment of the duke. Hayward.

Ye shall not add unto the word which I command you, neither shall you diminish aught from it. Deut. iv. 2.

To DIMI'NISH. v. n. To grow less; to be impaired.

What judgment I had, increases rather than diminishes; and thoughts, such as they are, come crowding in so fast upon me, that my only difficulty is to chuse or to reject. Dryden.

Crete's ample fields diminish to our eye;
Before the Boreal blasts the vessels fly. Pope's Odyssey.

DIMI'NISHINGLY. adv. [from diminish.] In a manner tending to vilify, or lessen.

I never heard him censure, or so much as speak diminishingly of any one that was absent. Locke.

DIMINU'TION. n. s. [diminutio, Lat.]

1. The act of making less: opposed to augmentation.

The one is not capable of any diminution or augmentation at all by men; the other apt to admit both. Hooker.

2. The state of growing less: opposed to increase.

The gravitating power of the sun is transmitted through the vast bodies of the planets without any diminution, so as to act upon all their parts, to their very centres, with the same force, and according to the same laws, as if the part upon which it acts were not surrounded with the body of the planet. Newton.

Finite and infinite seem to be looked upon as the modes of quantity, and to be attributed primarily to those things which are capable of increase or diminution. Locke.

3. Discredit; loss of dignity; degradation.

Gladly to thee
Heroick laurel'd Eugene yields the prime;
Nor thinks it diminution to be rank'd
In military honour next. Philips.

4. Deprivation of dignity; injury of reputation.

Make me wise by thy truth, for my own soul's salvation, and I shall not regard the world's opinion or diminution of me. King Charles.

They might raise the reputation of another, though they are a diminution to his. Addis. Spect.

5. [In architecture.] The contraction of the diameter of a column, as it ascends.

DIMI'NUTIVE. adj. [diminutivus, Lat.] Small; little; narrow; contracted.

The poor wren,
The most diminutive of birds, will fight,
Her young ones in her nest, against the owl. Shakesp. Macbeth.

It is the interest of mankind, in order to the advance of knowledge, to be sensible they have yet attained it but in poor and diminutive measure. Glanville's Scepsis.

The light of man's understanding is but a short, diminutive, contracted light, and looks not beyond the present. South.

If the ladies should once take a liking to such a diminutive race of lovers, we should, in a little time, see mankind epitomized, and the whole species in miniature. Addison.

They know how weak and awkward many of those little diminutive discourses are. Watts.

DIMI'NUTIVE. n. s. [from the adjective.]

1. A word formed to express littleness; as lapillus, in Lat. a little stone; maisonette, in Fr. a little house; maniken, in Eng. a little man.

He afterwards proving a dainty and effeminate youth, was commonly called, by the diminutive of his name, Peterkin or Perkin. Bacon's Hen. VII.

Sim, while but Sim, in good repute did live;
Was then a knave, but in diminutive. Cotton.

2. A small thing: a sense not now in use.

Follow his chariot; monster-like, be shewn
For poor'st diminutives, for doits! Shakesp.

DI'MISH. adj. [from dim.] Somewhat dim; somewhat obscure.

'Tis true, but let it not be known,
My eyes are somewhat dimish grown;
For nature, always in the right,
To your decays adapts my sight. Swift.

DI'MISSORY. adj. [dimissorius, Lat.] That by which a man is dismissed to another jurisdiction.

A bishop of another diocess ought neither to ordain or admit a clerk, without the consent of his own proper bishop, and without the letters dimissory. Ayliffe's Parergon.

DI'MITTY. n. s. A fine kind of fustian, or cloth of cotton.

I directed a trowze of fine dimitty. Wiseman.

DI'MLY. adv. [from dim.]

1. Not with a quick sight; not with a clear perception.

Unspeakable! who sitt'st above these heav'ns,
To us invisible, or dimly seen,
In these thy lowest works. Milton.

2. Not brightly; not luminously.

In the beginning of our pumping the air, the match appeared well lighted, though it had almost filled the receiver with fumes; but by degrees it burnt more and more dimly. Boyle's Spring of the Air.

I saw th' angelick guards from earth ascend,
Griev'd they must now no longer man attend;
The beams about their temples dimly shone;
One would have thought the crime had been their own. Dryden.

DI'MNESS. n. s. [from dim]

1. Dulness of sight.

2. Want of apprehension; stupidity.

Answerable to this dimness of their perception, was the whole system and body of their religion. Decay of Piety.

The dimple of the upper lip is the common measure of them all. Grew.

In her forehead's fair half-round,
Love sits in open triumph crown'd;
He in the dimple of her chin,
In private state, by friends is seen. Prior.

To DI'MPLE. v. n. [from the noun.] To sink in small cavities, or little inequalities.

The wild waves master'd him, and suck'd him in,
And smiling eddies dimpled on the main Dryden.

Eternal smiles his emptiness betray,
As shallow streams run dimpling all the way. Pope.

DI'MPLED. adj. [from dimple.] Set with dimples.

On each side her
Stood pretty dimpled boys like smiling Cupids.
Shakesp.

DI'MPLY. adj. [from dimple.] Full of dimples; sinking in little inequalities.

As the smooth surface of the dimply flood
The silver-slipper'd virgin lightly trod.
Harton's Isis.

DIN. n. s. [dyn a noise; dynan to make a noise, Sax. dyna to thunder, Islandick.] A loud noise; a violent and continued sound.

And all the way he roared as he went,
That all the forest with astonishment
Thereof did tremble; and the beasts therein
Fled fast away from that so dreadful din.
Hubberd's Tale.

O, 'twas a din to fright a monster's ear;
To make an earthquake: sure, it was the roar
Of a whole herd of lions. Shakesp. Tempest.

While the cock with lively din
Scatters the rear of darkness thin;
And to the stack, or the barn-door,
Stoutly struts his dame before. Milton.

Now night over heav'n
Inducing darkness, grateful truce impos'd,
And silence, on the odious din of war. Milton.

How, while the troubled elements around,
Earth, water, air, the stunning din resound,
Thro' streams of smoke and adverse fire he rides,
While every shot is levell'd at his sides. Smith

Some independent ideas, of no alliance to one another, are, by education, custom, and the constant din of their party, so coupled in their minds, that they always appear there together. Locke.

To DIN. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To stun with noise; to harass with clamour.

Rather live
To bait thee for his bread, and din your ears
With hungry cries. Otway's Venice Preserved.

2. To impress with violent and continued noise.

What shall we do, if his majesty puts out a proclamation commanding us to take Wood's halfpence? This hath been often dinned in my ears. Swift.

To DINE. v. n. [diner, Fr.] To eat the chief meal about the middle of the day.

Perhaps some merchant hath invited him,
And from the mart he 's somewhere gone to dinner:
Good sister, let us dine, and never fret. Shakesp.

My self, he, and my sister,
To-day did dine together. Shakesp.

He would dine with him the next day. Clarend.

Thus, of your heroes and brave boys,
With whom old Homer makes such noise,
The greatest actions I can find,
Are, that they did their work and din'd. Prior.

To DINE. v. a. To give a dinner to; to feed.

Boil this restoring root in gen'rous wine,
And set beside the door the sickly stock to dine.
Dryden's Virgil.

DINE'TICAL. adj. [δινητικὸς.] Whirling round; vertiginous.

Some of late have concluded, from spots in the sun, which appear and disappear again, that, besides the revolution it maketh with its orbs, it hath also a dinetical motion, and rolls upon its own poles. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

A spherical figure is most commodious for dinetical motion, or revolution upon its own axis. Ray.

To DING. pret. dung. v. a. [dringen, Dut.]

1. To dash with violence.

2. To impress with force.

Let us all ring fancy's knell;
Ding, dong bell. Shakesp.

DI'NGLE. n s. [from den, or din a hollow, Sax.] A hollow between hills; a dale.

I know each lane, and every alley green,
Dingle or bushy dell of this wild wood;
And every bosky bourn from side to side,
My daily walks and ancient neighbourhood.
Milton.

DI'NING-ROOM. n. s. [dine and room.] The principal apartment of the house; the room where entertainments are made.

He went out from the dining-room before he had fallen into errour by the intemperance of his meat, or the deluge of drink. Taylor's Rule of Living Holy.

DI'NNER. n. s. [diner, Fr.] The chief meal; the meal eaten about the middle of the day.

Let me not stay a jot for dinner;
Go, get it ready. Shakesp. King Lear.

Before dinner and supper, as often as it is convenient, or can be had, let the public prayers of the church, or some parts of them, be said publicly in the family. Taylor.

The jolly crew, unmindful of the past,
The quarry share, their plenteous dinner haste.
Dryden's Æneid.

DI'NNER-TIME. n. s. [dinner and time.] The time of dining.

At dinner-time,
I pray you, have in mind where we must meet.
Shakesp.

Then from the mint walks forth the man of rhyme,
Happy to catch me just at dinner-time. Pope.

DINT. n. s. [dynt, Sax.]

1. A blow; a stroke.

Much daunted with that dint, her sense was daz'd;
Yet, kindling rage, herself she gather'd round.
Spenser.

Neither vainly hope
To be invulnerable in these bright arms,
Though temper'd heav'nly; for that mortal dint,
Save he who reigns above, none can resist. Milton.

2. The mark made by a blow; the cavity remaining after a violent pressure.

He embrac'd her naked body o'er;
And, straining hard the statue, was afraid
His hands had made a dint, and hurt the maid.
Dryden.

3. Violence; force; power.

Now you weep, and, I perceive, you feel
The dint of pity. Shakesp. Julius Cæsar.

We are to wrest the whole Spanish monarchy out of the hands of the enemy, and, in order to it, to work our way into the heart of his country by dint of arms. Addison.

The dewlapt bull now chafes along the plain,
While burning love ferments in ev'ry vein;
His well-arm'd front against his rival aims,
And by the dint of war his mistress claims. Gay

To DINT. v. a. [from the noun.] To mark with a cavity by a blow, or violent impression.

With greedy force each other both assail,
And strike so fiercely, that they do impress
Deep-dinted furrows in the batter'd mail:
The iron walls to ward their blows were weak and frail. Fairy Queen.

Leave, leave, fair bride, your solitary bone,
No more shall you return to it alone;
It nurseth sadness; and your body's print,
Like to a grave, the yielding down doth dint. Donne.

Deep-dinted wrinkles on her cheeks she draws;
Sunk are her eyes, and toothless are her jaws. Dryden's Æneid.

DINUMERA'TION. n. s. [dinumeratio, Lat.] The act of numbering out singly.

DIOCE'SAN. n. s. [from diocess.] A bishop, as he stands related to his own clergy or flock.

As a diocesan you are like to outdo yourself in all other capacities, and exemplify every word of this discourse. South.

I have heard it has been advised by a diocesan to his inferior clergy, that they should read some of the most celebrated sermons printed by others. Tatler.

DI'OCESS. n. s. [diœcesis; a Greek word, compounded of διὰ and οἴκησις.] The circuit of every bishop's jurisdiction; for this realm has two divisions, one into shires or counties, in respect of temporal policy; another into dioceses, in respect of jurisdiction ecclesiastical. Cowell.

None ought to be admitted by any bishop, but such as have dwelt and remained in his diocess a convenient time. Whitgift.

He should regard the bishop of Rome as the islanders of Jersey and Guernsey do him of Constance in Normandy; that is, nothing at all, since by that French bishop's refusal to swear unto our king, those isles were annexed to the diocess of Winchester. Raleigh's Essays.

St Paul looks upon Titus as advanced to the dignity of a prince, ruler of the church, and intrusted with a large diocess, containing many particular cities, under the immediate government of their respective elders, and those deriving authority from his ordination. South.

DIO'PTRICAL. } n. s. [διόπτομαι.] Affording a medium for the sight; assisting the sight in the view of distant objects.
DIO'PTRICK. }

View the asperities of the moon through a dioptrick glass, and venture at the proportion of her hills by their shadows. More's Antid. against Atheism.

DIO'PTRICKS. n. s. A part of opticks, treating of the different refractions of the light passing through different mediums; as the air, water, glasses, &c. Harris.

DIORTHO'SIS. n. s. [διορθωσις, of διορθόω to make straight] A chirurgical operation, by which crooked or distorted members are restored to their primitive and regular shape. Harris.

To DIP. v. a. pret. dipped; particip. dipped, or dipt. [dippan, Sax. doopen, Dut.]

1. To immerge; to put into any liquor.

The person to be baptised may be dipped in water; and such an immersion or dipping ought to be made thrice, according to the canon. Ayliffe's Parergon.

Old Corineus compass'd thrice the crew,
And dipp'd an olive-branch in holy dew,
Which thrice he sprinkled round, and thrice aloud
Invok'd the dead, and then dismiss'd the crowd. Dryden's Æneid.

He turn'd a tyrant in his latter days,
And from the bright meridian where he stood,
Descending, dipp'd his hands in lovers' blood. Dryden's Fables.

The kindred arts shall in their praise conspire,
One dip the pencil, and one string the lyre. Pope.

Now, on fancy's easy wing convey'd,
The king descended to th' Elysian shade;
There in a dusky vale, where Lethe rolls,
Old Bavius sits to dip poetic souls. Pope's Dunc.

So fishes, rising from the main,
Can soar with moisten'd wings on high;
The moisture dried, they sink again,
And dip their wings again to fly. Swift.

2. To moisten; to wet.

And though not mortal, yet a cold shudd'ring dew
Dips me all o'er, as when the wrath of Jove Speaks thunder. Milton.

3. To be engaged in any affair.

When men are once dipt, what with the encouragements of sense, custom, facility, and shame of departing from what they have given themselves up to, they go on till they are stifled. L'Estrange.

In Richard's time, I doubt, he was a little dipt in the rebellion of the commons. Dryden's Fables.

4. To engage as a pledge: generally used for the first mortgage.

Be careful still of the main chance, my son;
Put out the principal in trusty hands,
Live on the use, and never dip thy lands. Dryden's Persius.

To DIP. v. n.

1. To sink; to immerge.

We have snakes in our cups, and in our dishes; and whoever dips too deep will find death in the pot. L'Estrange.

2. To enter; to pierce.

The vulture dipping in Prometheus' side,
His bloody beak with his torn liver dyed. Granville.

3. To enter slightly into any thing.

When I think all the repetitions are struck out in a copy, I sometimes find more upon dipping in the first volume. Pope.

4. To take that which comes first; to chuse by chance.

With what ill thoughts of Jove art thou possess'd?
Wouldst thou prefer him to some man? Suppose I dipp'd among the worst, and Stains chose? Dryden's Persius.

DI'PCHICK. n. s. [from dip and chick.] The name of a bird.

Dipchick is so named of his diving and littleness. Carew.

DIPE'TALOUS. adj. [δὶς and πέταλον.] Having two flower leaves.

DI'PHTHONG. n. s. [δίφθογγος.] A coalition of two vowels to form one sound; as vain, leaf, Cæsar.

We see how many disputes the simple and ambiguous nature of vowels created among grammarians, and how it has begot the mistake concerning diphthongs: all that are properly so are syllables, and not diphthongs, as is intended to be signified by that word. Holder's Elements of Speech.

Make a diphthong of the second eta and iota, instead of their being two syllables, and the objection is gone. Pope.

DI'PLOE. n. s. The inner plate or lamina of the skull.

DIPLO'MA. n. s. [διπλωμα.] A letter or writing conferring some privilege; so called, because they used formerly to be written on waxed tables, and folded together.

DI'PPER. n. s. [from dip.] One that dips in the water.

DIPPING Needle. n. s. A device which shews a particular property of the magnetick needle, so that, besides its polarity or verticity, which is its direction of altitude, or height above the horizon, when duly poised about an horizontal axis, it will always point to a determined degree of altitude, or elevation above the horizon, in this or that place respectively.

DI'PSAS. n. s. [Latin, from διψάω to thirst.] A serpent, whose bite produces the sensation of unquenchable thirst.

Scorpion, and asp, and amphisbœna dire,
Cerastes horn'd, hydrus, and ellops drear,
And dipsas. Milton.

DI'PTOTE. n. s. [δίπτωσις.] A noun consisting of two cases only. Clarke.

DI'PTYCH. n. s. [diptycha, Lat. two leaves folded together.] A register of bishops and martyrs.

The commemoration of saints was made out of the diptychs of the church, as appears by multitudes of places in St. Austin. Stillingfleet.

DIRE. adj. [dirus, Lat.] Dreadful; dismal; mournful; horrible; terrible; evil in a great degree.

Women fight,
To doff their dire distresses. Shakesp. Macbeth.

More by intemperance die
In meats and drinks, which on the earth shall bring Diseases dire; of which a monstrous crew
Before thee shall appear. Milton.

Hydras, and gorgons, and chimæras dire. Milton.

Or what the cross dire-looking planet smites,
Or hurtful worm with canker'd venom bites. Milton.

Dire was the tossing, deep the groans, despair
Tended the sick. Milton.

Discord! dire sister of the slaughter'd pow'r,
Small at her birth, but rising ev'ry hour.
While scarce the skies her horrid head can bound,
She stalks on earth, and shakes the world around. Pope.

DIRECT. adj. [directus, Lat.]

1. Straight; not crooked.

2. Not oblique.

The ships would move in one and the same surface; and consequently must needs encounter when they either advance towards one another, in direct lines, or meet in the intersection of cross lines. Bentley.

3. [In astronomy.] Appearing to an eye on earth to move progressively through the zodiac; not retrograde.

Two geomantick figures were display'd
Above his head, a warrior and a maid,
One when direct, and one when retrograde. Dryden's Fables.

4. Not collateral, as the grandson succeeds his grandsire in a direct line.

5. Apparently tending to some end, as in a straight line.

Such was as then the state of the king, as it was no time by direct means to seek her. And such was the state of his captivated will, as he would delay no time of seeking her. Sidney.

He that does this, will be able to cast off all that is superfluous: he will see what is pertinent, what coherent; what is direct to, what slides by, the question. Locke.

6. Open; not ambiguous.

There be, that are in nature faithful and sincere, and plain and direct, not crafty and involved. Bacon.

7. Plain; express.
He no where, that I know, says it in direct words. Locke.

To DIRE'CT. v. a. [dirigo, directum, Lat.]
1. To aim or drive in a straight line.
Two eagles from a mountain's height,
By Jove's command, direct their rapid flight. Pope.
2. To point against as a mark.
The spear flew hissing thro' the middle space,
And pierc'd his throat, directed at his face.
Dryden's Æneid.
3. To regulate; to adjust.
It is not in man that walketh to direct his steps. Jer. x. 23.
Wisdom is profitable to direct. Eccius. x. 10.
All that is in a man's power, is to mind what the ideas are that take their turns in his understanding; or else to direct and sort, and call in such as he desires. Locke.
4. To prescribe certain measure; to mark out a certain course.
He directeth it under the whole heavens, and his lightning unto the ends of the earth.
Job, xxxvii. 3.
5. To order; to command: to direct is a softer term than to command.

DIRE'CTER. n. s. [director, Lat.]
1. One that directs; one that prescribes.
2. An instrument that serves to guide any manual operation.

DIRE'CTION. n. s. [directio, Lat.]
1. Aim at a certain point.
These men's opinions are not the product of judgment, or the consequence of reason; but the effects of chance and hazard, of a mind floating at all adventures, without choice, and without direction. Locke.
The direction of good works to a good end, is the only principle that distinguishes charity.
Smalridge.
2. Motion impressed by a certain impulse.
No particle of matter, nor any combination of particles, that is, no body, can either move of itself, or of itself alter the direction of its motion. Cheyne.
3. Order; command; prescription.
From the counsel that St. Jerome giveth Læta, of taking heed how she read the apocrypha; as also by the help of other learned men's judgments, delivered in like case, we may take direction.
Hooker.
Ev'n now
I put myself to thy direction. Shakesp. Macbeth.
The nobles of the people digged it, by the direction of the law-giver. Numb. xxi. 18.

All chance, direction which thou canst not see. Pope.

DIRE'CTIVE. n. s. [from direct.]
1. Having the power of direction.
A law therefore, generally taken, is a directive rule unto goodness of operation. Hooker.
A power of command there is without all question, though there be some doubt in what faculty this command doth principally reside, whether in the will or the understanding. The true resolution is, that the directive command for counsel is in the understanding; and the applicative command, or empire, for putting in execution of what is directed, is in the will. Bramhall against Hobbes.
On the directive powers of the former, and the regularity of the latter, whereby it is capable of direction, depends the generation of all bodies.
Grew.
2. Informing; shewing the way.
Nor visited by one directive ray,
From cottage streaming, or from airy hall. Thoms.

DIRE'CTLY. adv. [from direct.]
1. In a straight line; rectilineally.
The more a body is near to the eyes, and the more directly it is opposed to them, the more it is enlightened; because the light languishes and lessens, the farther it removes from its proper source.
Dryden's Dufresnoy.
There was no other place assigned to any of this matter, than that whereunto its own gravity bore it, which was only directly downwards, whereby it obtained that place in the globe which was just underneath. Woodward.
If the refracted ray be returned directly back to the point of incidence, it shall be refracted by the incident ray. Newton's Opticks.
2. Immediately; apparently; without circumlocution; without any long train of consequence.
Infidels, being clean without the church, deny directly, and utterly reject, the very principles of Christianity, which hereticks embrace erroneously by misconstruction. Hooker.
No man hath hitherto been so impious, as plainly and directly to condemn prayer. Hooker.
By asserting the scripture to be the canon of our faith, I have unavoidably created to myself enemies in the papists directly, because they have kept the scripture from us what they could.
Dryd. Pref. to Religio Laici.
His work directly tends to raise sentiments of honour and virtue in his readers. Addis. Freeholder.
No reason can be assigned, why it is best for the world that God Almighty hath absolute power, which doth not directly prove that no mortal man should have the like. Swift.

DIRE'CTNESS. n. s. [from direct.] Straightness; tendency to any point; the nearest way.
They argued from celestial causes only, the constant vicinity of the sun, and the directness of his rays; never suspecting that the body of the earth had so great an efficiency in the changes of the air.
Bentley.

DIRE'CTOR. n. s. [director, Lat.]
1. One that has authority over others; a superintendent; one that has the general management of a design or work.

The manner of opening with a knife, is by sliding it on a director, the groove of which prevents its being misguided. Sharp's Surgery.

DIRE'CTORY. n. s. [from director.] The book which the factious preachers published in the rebellion for the direction of their sect in acts of worship.
As to the ordinance concerning the directory, we cannot consent to the taking away of the book of common prayer. Oxford Reasons against the Cov.

DI'REFUL. adj. [This word is frequent among the poets, but has been censured as not analogical; all other words compounded with full consisting of a substantive and full; as, dreadful, or full of dread; joyful, or full of joy.] Dire; dreadful; dismal.
Point of spear it never piercen would,
Ne dint of direful sword divide the substance could. Fairy Queen.
But yet at last, whereas the direful fiend
She saw not stir, off shaking vain affright,
She nigher drew, and saw that joyous end;
Then God she pray'd, and thank'd her faithful knight. Fairy Queen.
Direful hap betide that hated wretch
That makes us wretched by the death of thee.
Shakesp.
The voice of God himself speaks in the heart of men, whether they understand it or no; and by secret intimations gives the sinner a foretaste of that direful cup, which he is like to drink more deeply of hereafter. South.
I curs'd the direful author of my woes:
'Twas told again, and thence my ruin rose. Dryd.
Achilles' wrath, to Greeks the direful spring
Of woes unnumber'd, heavenly goddess! sing.
Pope.

Direness, familiar to my slaught'rous thoughts,
Cannot once start me. Shakesp. Macbeth.

DIRE'PTION. n s. [direptio, Lat.] The act of plundering.

DIRGE. n. s. [This is not a contraction of the Lat. dirige, in the popish hymn, Dirige gressus meus, as some pretend; but from the Teutonic dyrke, laudare to praise and extol. Whence it is possible their dyrke, and our dirge, was a laudatory song to commemorate and applaud the dead. Verstegan. Bacon apparently derives it from dirige.] A mournful ditty; a song of lamentation.
Th' imperial jointress of this warlike state
Have we, as 'twere, with a defeated joy,
With mirth in funeral, and with dirge in marriage,
In equal scale weighing delight and dole,
Taken to wife. Shakesp. Hamlet.
Meanwhile the body of Richard, after many indignities and reproaches, the dirges and obsequies of the common people towards tyrants, was obscurely buried. Bacon.
You from above shall hear each day
One dirge dispatch'd unto your clay;
These your own anthems shall become,
Your lasting epicedium. Sandys.
All due measures of her mourning kept,
Did office at the dirge, and by infection wept.
Dryden.

DI'RIGENT. adj. [dirigens, Lat.]
The dirigent line in geometry is that along which the line describent is carried in the generation of any figure. Harris.

DIRK. n. s. [an Erse word.] A kind of dagger used in the Highlands of Scotland.
In vain thy hungry mountaineers
Come forth in all their warlike geers,
The shield, the pistol, dirk, and dagger,
In which they daily wont to swagger. Tickell.

To DIRKE. v. a. To spoil; to ruin. Obsolete.
Thy waste bigness but cumbers the ground,
And dirkes the beauties of my blossoms round.
Spenser.

The presence of a king engenders love amongst his subjects and his loyal friends, as it disanimates his enemies. Shakesp. Henry VI.

He was confounded and disanimated at his presence, and added, How can the servant of my lord talk with my lord? Boyle's Seraphic Love.

DISANIMA'TION. n. s. [from disanimate.] Privation of life.

They cannot in reason retain that apprehension after death, as being affections which depend on life, and depart upon disanimation.
Brown's Vulgar Errours.

To* DISANNU'L. v. a. [dis and annul. This word is formed, contrarily to analogy, by those who, not knowing the meaning of the word annul, intended to form a negative sense by the needless use of the negative particle. It ought therefore to be rejected, as ungrammatical and barbarous.] To annul; to deprive of authority; to vacate; to make null; to make void; to nullify.

The Jews ordinances for us to resume, were to check our Lord himself, which hath disannulled them. Hooker.

That gave him power of disannulling of laws, and disposing of men's fortunes and estates, and the like points of absolute power, being in themselves harsh and odious. Bacon.

To be in both worlds full,
Is more than God was, who was hungry here:
Would thou his laws of fasting disannul?
Herbert.

Wilt thou my judgments disannul? Defame
My equal rule, to clear thyself of blame? Sandys

DISANNU'LMENT. n. s. [from disannul.] The act of making void.

To* DISAPPE'AR. v. n. [disparoitre, Fr.] To be lost to view; to vanish out of sight; to fly; to go away.

She disappear'd, and left me dark! I wak'd
To find her, or for ever to deplore. Milton.

When the night and winter disappear,
The purple morning rising with the year
Salutes the spring. Dryden.

The pictures drawn in our minds are laid in fading colours, and if not sometimes refreshed, vanish and disappear. Locke.

Criticks I saw that others names deface,
And fix their own with labour in their place;
Their own, like others, soon their place resign'd,
Or disappear'd, and left the first behind. Pope.

To* DISAPPO'INT. v. a. [dis and appoint.]

1. To defeat of expectation; to balk; to hinder from something expected.

The superior Being can defeat all his designs, and disappoint all his hopes. Tillotson.

Whilst the champion, with redoubled might,
Strikes home the javelin, his retiring foe
Shrinks from the wound, and disappoints the blow. Addison.

There 's nothing like surprising the rogues: how will they be disappointed, when they hear that thou hast prevented their revenge!
Arbuthnot's Hist. of John Bull.

We are not only tortured by the reproaches which are offered us, but are disappointed by the silence of men when it is unexpected, and humbled even by their praises. Addison.

2. It has of before the thing lost by disappointment.

The Janizaries, disappointed by the bassas of the spoil, received of the bounty of Solyman a great largess. Knolles.

DISAPPO'INTMENT. n. s. [from disappoint.] Defeat of hopes; miscarriage of expectations.

It is impossible for us to know what are calamities, and what are blessings. How many accidents have passed for misfortunes, which have turned to the welfare and prosperity of the persons in whose lot they have fallen! How many disappointments have, in their consequences, saved a man from ruin! Spectator.

If we hope for things, of which we have not thoroughly considered the value, our disappointment will be greater than our pleasure in the fruition of them. Addison's Spectator.

DISAPPROBA'TION. n. s. [dis and approbation.] Censure; condemnation; expression of dislike.

He was obliged to publish his letters, to shew his disapprobation of the publishing of others.
Pope.

To* DISAPPRO'VE. v. a. [desapprouver, Fr.]

1. To dislike: to censure.

I reason'd much, alas! but more I lov'd;
Sent and recall'd, ordain'd and disapprov'd. Prior.

Without good breeding truth is disapprov'd;
That only makes superior sense belov'd. Pope.

2. To reject as disliked; not to confirm by concurrence.

A project for a treaty of barrier with the States was transmitted hither from Holland, and was disapproved of by our courts. Swift.

Suspicions, and fantastical surmise,
And jealousy, with jaundice in her eyes,
Discolouring all she view'd. Dryden.
He who looks upon the soul through its outward actions, sees it through a deceitful medium, which is apt to discolour and pervert the object. Addison's Spectator.
Have a care lest some beloved notion, or some darling science, so prevail over your mind as to discolour all your ideas. Watts.

To DISCO'MFIT. v. a. [desconfire, Fr. sconfiggere, Ital. as if from disconfigere, Lat.] To defeat; to conquer; to vanquish; to overpower; to subdue; to beat; to overthrow.
Fight against that monstrous rebel, Cade,
Whom, since, I heard to be discomfited. Shakesp.
Joshua discomfited Amalek and his people with the edge of the sword. Exodus.
He, fugitive, declin'd superior strength;
Discomfited, pursued, in the sad chace
Ten thousand ignominious fall. Philips.
While my gallant countrymen are employed in pursuing rebels half discomfited through the consciousness of their guilt, I shall improve those victories to the good of my fellow subjects. Addison.

DISCO'MFIT. n. s. [from the verb.] Defeat; rout; overthrow.
Fly you must: incurable discomfit
Reigns in the hearts of all our present party. Shakesp.
Dagon must stoop, and shall ere long receive
Such a discomfit, as shall quite despoil him
Of all these boasted trophies. Milton's Agonistes.

DISCO'MFITURE. n. s. [from discomfit.] Defeat; loss of battle; rout; ruin; overthrow.
Sad tidings bring I to you out of France,
Of loss, of slaughter, and discomfiture. Shakesp.
Behold, every man's sword was against his fellow, and there was a very great discomfiture. 1 Sam.
What a defeat and discomfiture is it to a man, when he comes to use this wealth, to find it all false metal! Government of the Tongue.
He sent his angels to fight for his people; and the discomfiture and slaughter of great hosts is attributed to their assistance. Atterbury.

DISCOMFORT. n. s. [dis and comfort.] Uneasiness; sorrow; melancholy; gloom.
This himself did foresee, and therefore armed his church, to the end they might sustain it without discomfort. Hooker.
Discomfort guides my tongue,
And bids me speak of nothing but despair. Shak.
In solitude there is not only discomfort, but weakness also. South.

To DISCO'MFORT. v. a. [from the noun.] To grieve; to sadden; to deject.
Her champion went away discomforted as much as discomfited. Sidney.
His funeral shall not be in our camp,
Lest it discomfort us. Shakesp. Julius Cæsar.

DISCO'MFORTABLE. adj. [from discomfort.]
1. That is melancholy and refuses comfort.
Discomfortable cousin, know'st thou not
That when the searching eye of Heav'n is hid
Behind the globe, it lights the lower world? Shakesp.
2. That causes sadness.
What! did that help poor Dorus, whose eyes could carry unto him no other news but discomfortable? Sidney.

To DISCOMME'ND. v. a. [dis and commend.] To blame; to censure; to mention with disapprobation.
Absolutely we cannot discommend, we cannot absolutely approve, either willingness to live, or forwardness to die. Hooker.
Now you will all be wits: and he, I pray,
And you, that discommend it, mend the play. Denham.
Neither do I discommend the lofty style in tragedy, which is naturally pompous and magnificent. Dryden.

DISCOMME'NDABLE. adj. [from discommend.] Blameable; censurable: deserving blame.
Pusillanimity is, according to Aristotle's morality, a vice very discommendable. Ayliffe's Parergon.

DISCOMMENDA'TION. n. s. [from discommend.] Blame; reproach; censure.
Tully assigns three motions, whereby, without any discommendation, a man might be drawn to become an accuser of others. Ayliffe's Parergon.

DISCOMME'NDER. n. s. [from discommend.] One that discommends; a dispraiser.

To DISCOMMO'DE. v. a. [dis and commode, Fr.] To put to inconvenience; to molest; to incommode.

DISCOMMO'DIOUS. adj. [from discommode.] Inconvenient; troublesome; unpleasing.
So many thousand soldiers, unfit for any labour, or other trade, must either seek service and employment abroad, which may be dangerous; or else employ themselves here at home, which may be discommodious. Spenser's State of Ireland.

DISCOMMO'DITY. n. s. [from discommode.] Inconvenience; disadvantage; hurt; mischief.
We speak now of usury, how the discommodities of it may be best avoided, and the commodities retained: or how, in the balance of commodities and discommodities, the qualities of usury are to be reconciled. Bacon.
It is better that a ship should be preserved with some discommodity to the sailors, than that, the sailors being in health, the ship should perish. Hayward.

To DISCOMPO'SE. v. a. [décomposer Fr.]
1. To disorder; to unsettle.
The debate upon the self-denying ordinance had raised many jealousies, and discomposed the confidence that had formerly been between many of them. Clarendon.
2. To ruffle; to disorder.
Now Betty from her master's bed had flown,
And softly stole to discompose her own. Swift.
3. To disturb the temper; to agitate by perturbation.
No more, dear mother: ill in death it shows,
Your peace of mind by rage to discompose. Dryden.
4. To offend; to fret; to vex.
Men, who possess all the advantages of life, are in a state where there are many accidents to disorder and discompose, but few to please them. Swift.
5. To displace; to discard: not in use.
Though he was a dark prince, and infinitely suspicious, he never put down or discomposed a counsellor or near servant. Bacon.

DISCOMPO'SURE. n. s. [from discompose.] Disorder; perturbation.
He threw himself upon his bed, lamenting with much passion, and with abundance of tears; and continued in this melancholick discomposure of mind many days. Clarendon.

To DISCONCE'RT. v. a. [dis and concert.]

1. To unsettle the mind; to discompose.

You need not provoke their spirits by outrages: a careless gesture, a word, or a look, is enough to disconcert them. Collier.

2. To break a scheme; to defeat a machination.

DISCONFO'RMITY. n. s. [dis and conformity.] Want of agreement; inconsistency.

Lyes arise from errour and mistake, or malice and forgery; they consist in the disagreement and disconformity betwixt the speech and the conception of the mind, or the conceptions of the mind and the things themselves, or the speech and the things. Hakewill on Providence.

DISCONGRU'ITY. n. s. [dis and congruity.] Disagreement; inconsistency.

There is want of capacity in the thing, to sustain such a duration, from the intrinsical disconguity of the one to the other. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

DISCO'NSOLATE. adj. [dis and console.] Void of comfort; hopeless; sorrowful; melancholy.

See Cassius all disconsolate,
With Pindarus his bondman, on this hill. Shakesp.

If patiently thy bidding they obey,
Dismiss them not disconsolate. Milton.

The ladies and the knights, no shelter nigh,
Were dropping wet, disconsolate and wan,
And through their thin array receiv'd the rain. Dryden.

The moon reflects the sunbeams to us, and so, by illuminating the air, takes away in some measure the disconsolate darkness of our winter nights. Ray.

DISCO'NSOLATELY. adv. [from disconsolate.] In a disconsolate manner; comfortlessly.

DISCO'NSOLATENESS. n. s. [from disconsolate.] The state of being disconsolate.

DISCONTE'NT. n. s. [dis and content.] Want of content; uneasiness at the present state.

I see your brows full of discontent,
Your hearts of sorrows, and your eyes of tears. Shakesp.

Not that their pleasures caus'd her discontent,
She sigh'd, not that they stay'd, but that she went. Pope.

DISCONTE'NT. adj. [dis and content.] Uneasy at the present state; dissatisfied.

They were of their own nature circumspect and slow, discountenanced and discontent; and those the earl singled as fittest for his purpose. Hayward.

To DISCONTE'NT. v. a. [from the noun.] To dissatisfy; to make uneasy at the present state.

I know a discontented gentleman,
Whose humble means match not his haughty spirit. Shakesp.

The discontented now are only they
Whose crimes before did your just cause betray. Dryden.

DISCONTE'NTED. participial adj. [from discontent.] Uneasy; cheerless; malevolent.

Let us know
What will tie up your discontented sword. Shakesp.

These are, beyond comparison, the two greatest evils in this world; a diseased body, and a discontented mind. Tillotson.

The goddess, with a discontented air,
Seems to reject him, tho' she grants his pray'r. Pope.

DISCONTE'NTEDNESS. n. s. [from discontented.] Uneasiness; want of ease; dissatisfaction.

A beautiful bust of Alexander the Great casts up his face to heaven with a noble air of grief, or discontentedness, in his looks. Addison's Travels.

DISCONTE'NTMENT. n. s. [from discontent.] The state of being discontented; uneasiness.

These are the vices that fill them with general discontentment, as though the bosom of that famous church, wherein they live, were more noisome than any dungeon. Hooker.

The politick and artificial nourishing and entertaining of hopes, and carrying men from hopes to hopes, is one of the best antidotes against the poison of discontentments. Bacon.

DISCONTI'NUANCE. n. s. [from discontinue.]

1. Want of cohesion of parts; want of union of one part with another; disruption.

The stillicides of water, if there be enough to follow, will draw themselves into a small thread, because they will not discontinue; but if there be no remedy, then they cast themselves into round drops, which is the figure that saveth the body most from discontinuance. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

2. Cessation; intermission.

Let us consider whether our approaches to him are sweet and refreshing, and if we are uneasy under any long discontinuance of our conversation with him. Atterbury.

3. [In the common law.] An interruption or breaking off; as discontinuance of possession, or discontinuance of process. The effect of discontinuance of possession is, that a man may not enter upon his own land or tenement alienated, whatsoever his right be unto it, or by his own authority; but must seek to recover possession by law. The effect of discontinuance of plea is, that the instance may not be taken up again, but by a new writ to begin the suit afresh. Cowell.

DISCONTINUA'TION. n. s. [from discontinue.] Disruption of continuity; breach of union of parts; disruption; separation.

Upon any discontinuation of parts, made either by bubbles, or by shaking the glass, the whole mercury falls. Newton.

To DISCONTI'NUE. v. n. discontinuer, Fr.]

1. To lose the cohesion of parts; to suffer separation or disruption of substance.

All bodies, ductile and tensile, as metals, that will be drawn into wires; wool and tow, that will be drawn into yarn, or thread; have in them the appetite of not discontinuing strong, which maketh them follow the force that pulleth them out, and yet so as not to discontinue or forsake their own body. Bacon.

2. To lose an established or prescriptive custom or right.

Thyself shalt discontinue from thine heritage that I give thee, and I will cause thee to serve thine enemies. Jer.

To DISCONTI'NUE. v. a.

1. To leave off; to cease any practice or habit.

Twenty puny lies I'll tell,
That men shall swear I've discontinued school
Above a twelvemonth. Shakesp.

Examine thy customs of diet, sleep, exercise, apparel, and the like; and try, in any thou shalt judge hurtful, to discontinue it by little and little; but so, as if thou find any inconvenience by the change, thou come back to it again. Bacon.

2. To break off; to interrupt.

There is that property, in all letters, of aptness to be conjoined in syllables and words, through the voluble motions of the organs from one stop or figure to another, that they modify and discriminate the voice, without appearing to discontinue it. Holder's Elements of Speech.

DISCONTINUI'TY. n. s. [dis and continuity.] Disunity of parts; want of cohesion.

That discontinuity of parts is the principal cause of the opacity of bodies, will appear by considering that opaque substances become transparent by filling their pores with any substance of equal, or almost equal, density with their parts. Newton.

DISCONVE'NIENCE. n. s. [dis and convenience.] Incongruity; disagreement; opposition of nature.

Fear ariseth many times out of natural antipathies of nature; but, in these disconveniencies of nature, deliberation hath no place at all. Bramhall's Answer to Hobbes.

DI'SCORD. n. s. [discordia, Lat.]

1. Disagreement; opposition; mutual anger; reciprocal oppugnancy.

See what a scourge is laid upon your hate,
That heav'n finds means to kill your joys with love!
And I, for winking at your discords too,
Have lost a brace of kinsmen. Shakesp. Romeo and Juliet.

He is a false witness that speaketh lies, and that soweth discord among brethren. Proverbs.

2. Difference or contrariety of qualities, particularly of sounds.

Take but degree away, untune that string,
And hark what discord follows; each thing meets
In mere oppugnancy. Shakesp. Troil. and Cress.

Discord, like that of music's various parts,
Discord that makes the harmony of hearts;
Discord, that only this dispute shall bring,
Who best shall love the duke and serve the king. Dryden.

All nature is but art unknown to thee;
All chance, direction which thou canst not see;
All discord, harmony not understood;
All partial evil, universal good. Pope.

3. [In music.] Sounds not of themselves pleasing, but necessary to be mixed with others.

It is sound alone that doth immediately and incorporeally affect most; this is most manifest in music, and concords and discords in music: for all sounds, whether they be sharp or flat, if they be sweet, have a roundness and equality; and if they be harsh, are unequal: for a discord itself is but a harshness of divers sounds meeting. Bacon.

It is the lark that sings so out of tune,
Straining harsh discords and unpleasing sharps. Sha.

How doth music amaze us, when of discords she maketh the sweetest harmony! Peacham.

To DI'SCORD. v. n. [discordo, Lat.] To disagree; not to suit with.

Sounds do disturb and alter the one the other, sometimes the one drowning the other, and making it not heard; sometimes the one jarring and discording with the other, and making a confusion. Bacon.

DISCO'RDANCE. } n. s. [from discord.]
DISCO'RDANCY. } Disagreement; opposition; inconsistency.

DISCO'RDANT. adj. [discordans, Lat.]

1. Inconsistent; at variance with itself.

Myrrha was joy'd the welcome news to hear,
But, clogg'd with guilt, the joy was unsincere;
So various, so discordant is the mind,
That in our will a different will we find. Dryden.

2. Opposite; contrarious.

The discordant attraction of some wandering comets would certainly disorder the revolutions of the planets, if they approached too near them. Cheyne

3. Incongruous; not conformable.

Hither conscience is to be referred; if by a comparison of things done with the rule there be a consonancy, then follows the sentence of approbation; if discordant from it, the sentence of condemnation. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

DISCO'RDANTLY. adv. [from discordant.]

1. Inconsistently; in disagreement with itself.

2. In disagreement with another.

Two strings of a musical instrument being struck together, making two noises that arrive at the ear at the same time as to sense, yield a sound differing from either of them, and as it were compounded of both; insomuch, that if they be discordantly tuned, though each of them struck apart would yield a pleasing sound, yet being struck together they make a harsh and troublesome noise. Boyle on Colours.

3. Peevishly; in a contradictious manner.

To DISCO'VER. v. a. [découvrir, Fr. dis and cover.]

1. To shew; to disclose; to bring to light; to make visible.

2. To expose to view.

The cover of the coach was made with such joints, that as they might, to avoid the weather, pull it up close, so they might put each end down, and remain as discovered and open-sighted as on horseback. Sidney.

Go draw aside the curtains, and discover
The several caskets to this noble prince. Shakesp.

He discovereth deep things out of darkness, and bringeth out to light the shadow of death. Job, xii. 22.

3. To shew; not to shelter; to expose.

And now will I discover her lewdness. Hosea.
Law can discover sin, but not remove. Milton.

4. To make known; not to disguise; to reveal.

We will pass over unto those men, and we will discover ourselves unto them. Isa. xiv. 8.

Eve, who unseen
Yet all had heard, with audible lament
Discover'd from the place of her retire. Milton.

5. To ken; to espy.

When we had discovered Cyprus, we left it on the left hand. Acts.

6. To find out; to obtain information.

He shall never, by any alteration in me, discover my knowledge of his mistake. Pope's Letters.

7. To detect; to find though concealed.

Up he starts,
Discover'd and surpris'd. Milton.

Man with strength and free will arm'd
Complete, to have discover'd and repuls'd
Whatever wiles of foe or seeming friend. Milton.

8. To find things or places not known before.

Some to discover islands far away. Shakesp.

Another part in squadrons bend their march
On bold adventure, to discover wide
That dismal world. Milton.

So of things. The Germans discover'd printing and gunpowder.

9. To exhibit to the view.

Some high climbing hill,
Which to his eye discovers unaware
The goodly prospect of some foreign land,
First seen, or some renown'd metropolis
With glist'ring spires and battlements adorn'd. Milton.

Not light, but rather darkness visible,
Serv'd only to discover sights of woe. Milton.

DISCO'VERABLE. adj. [from discover.]

1. That which may be found out.

That mineral matter, which is so intermixed with the common and terrestrial matter, as not to be discoverable by human industry; or, if discoverable, diffused and scattered amongst the grosser matter, can never be separated. Woodward's Natural History.

Revelation may assert two things to be joined, whose connection or agreement is not discoverable by reason. Watts.

2. Apparent; exposed to view.

They were deceived by Satan, and that not in an invisible situation, but in an open and discoverable apparition, that is, in the form of a serpent. Brown's Vulg. Errours.

It is concluded by astronomers, that the atmosphere of the moon hath no clouds nor rains, but a perpetual and uniform serenity; because nothing discoverable in the lunar surface is ever covered and absconded by the interposition of any clouds or mists. Bentley.

DISCO'VERER. n. s. [from discover.]

1. One that finds any thing not known before; a finder out.

If more be found out, they will not recompense the discoverer's pains, but will be fitter to be cast out. Holder.

Places receive appellations, according to the language of the discoverer, from observations made upon the people. Broome.

The Cape of Good Hope was doubled in those early times; and the Portuguese were not the first discoverers of that navigation. Arbuthnot on Coins.

An old maiden gentlewoman is the greatest discoverer of judgments; she can tell you what sin it was that set such a man's house on fire. Addison's Spectator.

2. A scout; one who is put to descry the posture or number of an enemy; speculator.

Here stand, my lords, and send discoverers forth,
To know the numbers of our enemies. Shakesp.

DISCO'VERY. n. s. [from discover.]

1. The act of finding any thing hidden.

Of all who since have us'd the open sea,
Than the bold English none more fame have won;
Beyond the year, and out of heaven's high way,
They make discoveries where they see no sun. Dryden.

2. The act of revealing or disclosing any secret.

What, must I hold a candle to my shame?
They in themselves, good sooth, are too, too light.
Why 'tis an office of discovery, love,
And I should be obscur'd. Shakesp. Merchant of Venice.

Things that appeared amiable by the light of this world, appear of a different odious hue in the clear discoveries of the next. South.

It would be necessary to say something of the state to which the war hath reduced us; such a discovery ought to be made as late as possible. Swift.

To DISCOU'NSEL. v. a. [dis and counsel.] To dissuade; to give contrary advice. Obsolete.

But him that palmer from that vanity
With temperate advice discounselled. Spenser.

DI'SCOUNT. n. s. [dis and count.] The sum refunded in a bargain.

His whole intention was, to buy a certain quantity of copper money from Wood, at a large discount, and sell them as well as he could. Swift.

To DI'SCOUNT. v. a. [from the noun.] To count back; to pay back again.

My father's, mother's, brother's death I pardon:
My prayers and penance shall discount for these,
And beg of heav'n to charge the bill on me. Dryden.

The farmers, spitefully combin'd,
Force him to take his tithes in kind;
And Parvisol discounts arrears
By bills for taxes and repairs. Swift.

To DISCOU'NTENANCE. v. a. [dis and countenance.]

1. To discourage by cold treatment.

Unwilling they were to discountenance any man who was willing to serve them. Clarendon.

The truly upright judge will always countenance right, and discountenance wrong. Atterbury.

2. To abash; to put to shame.

Wisdom, in discourse with her,
Loses discountenanc'd, and like folly shews. Milton.

He came, and with him Eve, more loth, tho' first
To offend; discountenanc'd both and discompos'd. Milton.

How would one look from his majestic brow,
Seated as on the top of virtue's hill,
Discount'nance her despis'd! Milton.

DISCOU'NTENANCE. n. s. [dis and countenance.] Cold treatment; unfavourable aspect; unfriendly regard.

He thought a little discountenance upon those persons would suppress that spirit. Clarendon.

All accidental misfortunes, how inevitable soever, were still attended with very apparent discountenance. Clarendon.

In expectation of the hour of judgment, he patiently bears all the difficulties of duty, and the discountenance he meets with from a wicked and prophane world. Rogers.

DISCOU'NTENANCER. n. s. [from discountenance.] One that discourages by cold treatment; one that depresses by unfriendly regard.

Rumours of scandal and murmurs against the king, and his government, taxed him for a great taxer of his people, and discountenancer of his nobility. Bacon.

To DISCOU'RAGE. v. a. [décourager, Fr. dis and courage.]

1. To depress; to deprive of confidence; to deject; to dastardize.

I might neither encourage the rebels insolence, nor discourage the protestants loyalty and patience. King Charles.

The apostle with great zeal discourages too unreasonable a presumption. Rogers.

2. To deter; to fright from any attempt: with from before the thing.

Wherefore discourage ye the heart of the children of Israel from going over into the land? Numbers.

3. It is irregularly used by Temple with to before the following word.

You may keep your beauty and your health, unless you destroy them yourself, or discourage them to stay with you, by using them ill. Temple.

DISCOU'RAGER. n. s. [from discourage.] One that impresses diffidence and terrour.

Most men in years, as they are generally discouragers of youth, are like old trees, which, being past bearing themselves, will suffer no young plants to flourish beneath them. Pope.

DISCOU'RAGEMENT. n. s. [from discourage.]

1. The act of deterring, or depressing hope.

2. Determent; that which deters from any thing: with from.

Amongst other impediments of any inventions, it is none of the meanest discouragements, that they are so generally derided by common opinion. Wilkins.

The books read at schools and colleges are full of incitements to virtue, and discouragement from vice. Swift.

3. The cause of depression, or fear: with to, less properly.

To things we would have them learn, the great and only discouragement is, that they are called to them. Locke.

DISCOURSE. n. s. [discours, Fr. discursus, Lat.]

1. The act of the understanding, by which it passes from premises to consequences.

By reason of that original weakness in the instruments, without which the understanding part is not able in this world by discourse to work, the very conceit of painfulness is a bridle to stay us. Hooker

Sure he that made us with such large discourse,
Looking before and after, gave us not
That capability and godlike reason
To rust in us unus'd. Shakesp.

The act of the mind which connects propositions, and deduceth conclusions from them, the schools call discourse; and we shall not miscall it, if we name it reason. Glanville.

2. Conversation; mutual intercourse of language; talk.

He waxeth wiser than himself, more by an hour's discourse, than by a day's meditation. Bacon.

In thy discourse, if thou desire to please,
All such is courteous, useful, new, or witty;
Usefulness comes by labour, wit by ease,
Courtesy grows in court, news in the city. Herbert.

The vanquish'd party with the victors join'd,
Nor wanted sweet discourse, the banquet of the mind. Dryden.

3. Effusion of language; speech.

Topical and superficial arguments, of which there is store to be found on both sides, filling the head with variety of thoughts, and the mouth with copious discourse, serve only to amuse the understanding and entertain company. Locke.

4. A treatise; a dissertation either written or uttered.

The discourse here is about ideas, which, he says, are real things, and seen in God. Locke.

Plutarch, in his discourse upon garrulity, commends the fidelity of the companions of Ulysses. Pope's Odyssey.

To DISCOU'RSE. v. n. [from the noun.]

Of these he murders one; he boils the flesh,
And lays the mangled morsels in a dish. Dryden.
I saw among the ruins an old heathen altar, with this particularly in it, that it is hollowed like a dish at one end; but it was not this end on which the sacrifice was laid. Addison.

2. A deep hollow vessel for liquid food.
Who would rob a hermit of his weeds,
His few books, or his beads, or maple dish;
Or do his grey hairs any violence? Milton.
A ladle for our silver dish
Is what I want, is what I wish. Prior.

3. The meat served in a dish; any particular kind of food.
I have here a dish of doves, that I would bestow upon your worship. Shakesp. Merch. of Venice.
Let's kill him boldly, but not wrathfully;
Let's carve him as a dish fit for the gods,
Not hew him as a carcass fit for hounds.
Shakesp. Julius Cæsar.
The contract you pretend with that base wretch,
One bred of alms and foster'd with cold dishes,
With scraps o' th' court; it is no contract, none.
Shakesp.
'Tis not the meat, but 'tis the appetite,
Makes eating a delight;
And if I like one dish
More than another, that a pheasant is Suckling.
The earth would have been deprived of a most excellent and wholesome fare, and very many delicious dishes that we have the use and benefit of. Woodward.
Many people would, with reason, prefer the griping of an hungry belly, to those dishes which are a feast to others. Locke.

2. Unchastity; incontinence; lewdness.
Mrs. Ford, the honest woman, the modest wife, the virtuous creature, that hath the jealous fool to her husband! I suspect without cause, mistress, do I?—Heaven be my witness you do, if you suspect me in any dishonesty. Shakesp.

DISHONOUR. n. s. [dis and honour.]
1. Reproach; disgrace; ignominy.
Let not my jealousies be your dishonours,
But mine own safeties. Shakesp. Macbeth.
He was pleased to own Lazarus even in the dishonours of the grave, and vouchsafed him, in that despicable condition, the glorious title of his friend. Boyle's Seraphick Love.
Take him for your husband and your lord;
'Tis no dishonour to confer your grace
On one descended from a royal race. Dryd. Fables.
2. Reproach uttered; censure; report of infamy.
So good, that no tongue could ever
Pronounce dishonour of her; by my life
She never knew harm doing. Shakesp. Hen. VIII.

To DISHO'NOUR. v. a. [dis and honour.]
1. To disgrace; to bring shame upon; to blast with infamy.
It is no vicious blot, murther, or foulness,
No unchaste action, or dishonour'd step,
That hath depriv'd me of your grace and favour.
Shakesp.
This no more dishonours you at all,
Than to take in a town with gentle words,
Which else would put you to your fortune.
Shakesp. Coriolanus.
A woman that honoureth her husband, shall be judged wise of all: but she that dishonoureth him in her pride, shall be counted ungodly of all.
Eccl. xxvi. 26.
We are not so much to strain ourselves to make those virtues appear in us which really we have not, as to avoid those imperfections which may dishonour us. Dryden's Dufresnoy.
2. To violate chastity.
3. To treat with indignity.
One glimpse of glory to my issue give,
Grac'd for the little time he has to live:
Dishonour'd by the king of men he stands;
His rightful prize is ravish'd from his hands.
Dryden's Iliad.

DISINHE'RISON. n. s. [dis and inherit.]
1. The act of cutting off from any hereditary succession; the act of disinheriting.
If he stood upon his own title of the house of Lancaster, inherent in his person, he knew it was a title condemned by parliament, and generally prejudged in the common opinion of the realm, that it tended directly to the disinherison of the line of York. Bacon's Henry VII.
The chief minister of the revenue was obliged to prevent, and even oppose, such disinherison. Clarendon.
2. The state of being cut off from an hereditary right.
In respect of the effects and evil consequences, the adultery of the woman is worse, as bringing bastardy into a family, and disinherisons or great injuries to the lawful children. Taylor.

To DISINHE'RIT. v. a. [dis and inherit.] To cut off from an hereditary right; to deprive of an inheritance.
Is it then just with us to disinherit
The unborn nephews for the father's fault? Davies.
Unmuffle, ye faint stars; and thou, fair moon,
Stoop thy pale visage through an amber cloud,
And disinherit chaos that reigns here
In double night of darkness, and of slander. Milt.
Posterity stands curs'd! fair patrimony,
That I must leave ye, sons! O were I able
To waste it all myself, and leave ye none;
So disinherited, how would ye bless
Me, now your curse! Milton.
Of how fair a portion Adam disinherited his whole posterity by one single prevarication! South.

To DISINTE'R. v. a. [from dis and inter.] To unbury; to take as out of the grave.
The philosopher, the saint, or the hero, the wise, the good, or the great man, very often lie hid and concealed in a plebeian, which a proper education might have disinterred. Addison.

Rotation must disperse in air
All things which on the rapid orb appear;
And if no power that motion should controul,
It must disjoint and dissipate the whole. Blackm.
Should a barbarous Indian, who had never seen a palace or a ship, view the separate and disjointed parts, he would be able to form but a very lame and dark idea of either of those excellent and useful inventions. Watts.
4. To carve a fowl.
5. To make incoherent; to break the relation between the parts.
The constancy of your wit was not wont to bring forth such disjointed speeches. Sidney.
But now her grief has wrought her into frenzy;
The images her troubled fancy forms
Are incoherent, wild; her words disjointed. Smith.

To DISJOI'NT. v. n. To fall in pieces.
Let both worlds disjoint, and all things suffer,
Ere we will eat our meal in fear. Shak. Macbeth.

DISJOI'NT. participle. [from the verb.] Separated; divided. We now write disjointed.
Young Fontinbras,
Holding a weak supposal of our worth,
Thinks by our late dear brother's death
Our state to be disjoint and out of frame. Shakesp. Hamlet.

DISJUDICA'TION. n. s. [dijudicatio, Lat.] Judgment; determination: perhaps only mistaken for dijudication.
The disposition of the organ is of great importance in the disjudications we make of colours. Boyle on Colours.

DISJU'NCT. adj. [disjunctus, Lat.] Disjoined; separate.

DISJU'NCTION. n. s. [from disjunctio, Lat.] Disunion; separation; parting.
You may
Enjoy your mistress now, from whom you see
There's no disjunction to be made, but by Your ruin. Shakesp. Winter's Tale.
There is a great analogy between the body natural and politic, in which the ecclesiastical or spiritual part justly supplies the part of the soul; and the violent separation of this from the other, does as certainly infer death and dissolution, as the disjunction of the body and the soul in the natural. South.

DISJU'NCTIVE. adj. [disjunctivus, Lat.]
1. Incapable of union.
Such principles, whose atoms are of that disjunctive nature, as not to be united in a sufficient number to make a visible mass. Grew.
2. That which marks separation or opposition: as, I love him, or fear him.
There are such words as disjunctive conjunctions. Watts.
3. [In logick.] A disjunctive proposition is when the parts are opposed to one another by disjunctive particles: as, It is either day or night; The weather is either shiny or rainy; Quantity is either length, breadth, or depth. The truth of disjunctives depends on the necessary and immediate opposition of the parts, therefore only the last of these examples is true: but the two first are not strictly true; because twilight is a medium between day and night; and dry cloudy weather is a medium between shining and raining. Watts's Logick.
A disjunctive syllogism is when the major proposition is disjunctive: as, the earth moves in a circle, or an ellipsis, but it does not move in a circle, therefore it moves in an ellipsis. Watts's Logick.

DISJU'NCTIVELY. adv. [from disjunctive.] Distinctly; separately.
What he observes of the numbers disjunctively and apart, reason suggests to be applicable to the whole body united Causes of the Decay of Piety.

DISK. n. s. [discus, Lat.]
1. The face of the sun, or any planet, as it appears to the eye.
The disk of Phœbus, when he climbs on high,
Appears at first but as a bloodshot eye. Dryden.
It is to be considered, that the rays, which are equally refrangible, do fall upon a circle answering to the sun's disk. Newton
Mercury's disk
Can scarce be caught by philosophic eye,
Lost in the near effulgence. Thomson.
2. A broad piece of iron thrown in the ancient sports; a quoit.
The crystal of the eye, which in a fish is a ball, in any land animal is a disk or bowl; being hereby fitted for the clearer sight of the object. Grew.
In areas varied with mosaic art,
Some whirl the disk, and some the jav'lin dart. Pope.

DISKI'NDNESS. n. s. [dis and kindness.]
1. Want of kindness; want of affection; want of benevolence.
2. Ill turn; injury; act of malignity; detriment.
This discourse is so far from doing any diskindness to the cause, that it does it a real service. Woodward.

DISLI'KE. n. s. [from the verb.]
1. Disinclination: absence of affection; the contrary to fondness.
He then them took, and tempering goodly well
Their contrary dislikes with loved means,
Did place them all in order, and compel
To keep themselves within their sundry reigns,
Together link'd with adamantine chains Spenser.
Your dislikes, to whom I would be pleasing,
Do cloud my joys with danger and with sorrow. Shakesp.
God's grace, that principle of his new birth, gives him continual dislike to sin. Hammond's Pract. Catechism.
Our likings or dislikes are founded rather upon humour and fancy, than upon reason. L'Estrange.
Sorrow would have been as silent as thought, as severe as philosophy. It would have rested in inward senses, tacit dislikes. South.
The jealous man is not angry if you dislike another; but if you find those faults which are in his own character, you discover not only your dislike of another, but of himself. Addison.
2. Discord; dissension; disagreement. This sense is not now in use.
This said Aletes, and a murmur rose
That shew'd dislike among the christian peers. Fairfax

To DISLI'KE. v. a. [dis and like.] To disapprove; to regard without affection; to regard with ill will or disgust.
What most he should dislike, seems pleasant to him;
What like, offensive. Shakesp. King Lear.
Ye dislike, and so undo
The players, and disgrace the poet too. Denham.
Whosoever dislikes the digressions, or grows weary of them, may throw them away. Temple.

DISLI'KEFUL. adj. [dislike and full.] Disaffected; malign: not in use.
I think it best, by an union of manners, and conformity of minds, to bring them to be one people, and to put away the dislikeful conceit of the one and the other. Spenser's Ireland.

To DISLI'KEN. v. a. [dis and liken.] To make unlike. Unusual.
Muffle your face,
Dismantle you; and, as you can, disliken
The truth of your own seeming. Shakesp. Winter's Tale.

DISLI'KENESS. n. s. [dis and likeness.] Dissimilitude; not resemblance; unlikeness.
That which is not designed to represent any thing but itself, can never be capable of a wrong representation, nor mislead us from the true apprehension of any thing by its dislikeness to it; and such, excepting those of substances, are all our own complex ideas. Locke.

DISLI'KER. n. s. [from dislike.] A disapprover; one that is not pleased.
There is a point, which whoever can touch, will never fail of pleasing a majority, so great that the dislikers will be forced to fall in with the herd. Swift.

To DISLI'MB. v. a. [dis and limb.] To dilaniate: to tear limb from limb. Dict.

To DISLI'MN. v. a. [dis and limn.] To unpaint; to strike out of a picture.
That which is now a horse, even with a thought
The rack dislimns, and makes it indistinct
As water is in water. Shakesp. Ant. and Cleop.

To DI'SLOCATE. v. a. [dis and locus, Lat.]
1. To put of the proper place.
After some time the strata on all sides of the globe were dislocated, and their situation varied, being elevated in some places, and depressed in others. Woodward.
2. To put out of joint; to disjoint.
Were't my fitness
To let these hands obey my boiling blood,
They 're apt enough to dislocate and tear
Thy flesh and bones. Shakesp. King Lear.

DISLOCA'TION. n. s. [from dislocate.]
1. The act of shifting the places of things.
2. The state of being displaced.
The posture of rocks, often leaning or prostrate shews that they had some dislocation from their natural site. Burnet.
3. A luxation; a violent pressure of a bone out of the socket, or correspondent part; a joint put out.
It might go awry either within or without the upper, as often as it is forcibly pulled to it, and so cause a dislocation, or a strain. Grew's Museum.

To DISLO'DGE. v. a. [dis and lodge.]
1. To remove from a place.
The shell-fish which are resident in the depths live and die there, and are never dislodged or removed by storms, nor cast upon the shores; which the littorales usually are. Woodward.
2. To remove from an habitation.
These senses lost, behold a new defeat,
The soul dislodging from another seat. Dryden's Juvenal.

3. To drive an enemy from a station.
My sword can perfect what it has begun,
And from your walls dislodge that haughty son.
Dryden.

4. To remove an army to other quarters.
The ladies have prevail'd,
The Volscians are dislodg'd, and Marcus gone.
Shakesp.

To DISLO'DGE. v. n. To go away to another place.
Soon as midnight brought on the dusky hour,
Friendliest to sleep, and silence, he resolv'd
With all his legions to dislodge. Milton.

DISLOY'AL. adj. [desloyal, Fr. dis and loyal.]
1. Not true to allegiance; faithless; false to a sovereign; disobedient.
Foul distrust and breach
Disloyal; on the part of man, revolt
And disobedience. Milton.
2. Dishonest; perfidious. Obsolete.
Such things, in a false disloyal knave,
Are tricks of custom; but, in a man that 's just,
They 're cold delations working from the heart,
That passion cannot rule. Shakesp. Othello.
3. Not true to the marriage-bed.
The lady is disloyal.
——Disloyal! The word is too good to paint out her wickedness. Shakesp.
Disloyal town!
Speak, didst not thou
Forsake thy faith, and break thy nuptial vow?
Dryden.
4. False in love; not constant. The three latter senses are now obsolete.

DISLO'YALLY. adv. [from disloyal.] Not faithfully; treacherously; disobediently.

DISLO'YALTY. n. s. [from disloyal.]

To DISMA'NTLE. v. a. [dis and mantle.]
1. To deprive of a dress; to strip; to denude.
He that makes his prince despised and undervalued, and beats him out of his subjects hearts, may easily strip him of his other garrisons, having already dispossessed him of his strongest, by dismantling him of his honour, and seizing his reputation South.
2. To loose; throw off a dress; to throw open.
This is most strange!
That she, who ev'n but now was your best object,
Dearest and best, should in this trice of time
Commit a thing so monstrous, to dismantle
So many folds of favour. Shakesp. King Lear.
3. To strip a town of its outworks.
It is not sufficient to possess our own fort, without the dismantling and demolishing of our enemies. Hakewill.
4. To break down any thing external.
His eyeballs, rooted out, are thrown to ground;
His nose dismantled in his mouth is found;
His jaws, cheeks, front, one undistinguish'd wound. Dryden.

To DISMA'SK. v. a. [dis and mask.] To divest of a mask; to uncover from concealment.
Fair ladies mask'd are roses in the bud,
Or angels veil'd in clouds; are roses blown,
Dismask'd, their damask sweet commixture shewn. Shakesp.

And be a thwart disnatur'd torment to her.
Shakesp. King Lear.

DISOBE'DIENCE. n. s. [dis and obedience.]
1. Violation of lawful command or prohibition; breach of duty due to superiours.
Th' offence is holy that she hath committed;
And this deceit loses the name of craft,
Of disobedience, or unduteous title. Shakesp.
Of man's first disobedience, and the fruit
Of that forbidden tree, sing heav'nly muse. Milt.
Murder, adultery, or disobedience to parents, have a general notion antecedently to laws. Stillingfleet.
This is not disobedience, but rebellion; 'tis disclaiming the sovereignty of Christ, and renouncing all allegiance to his authority. Rogers.
2. Incompliance.
If planetary orbs the sun obey,
Why should the moon disown his sovereign sway
Why in a whirling eddy of her own
Around the globe terrestrial should she run?
This disobedience of the moon will prove
The sun's bright orb does not the planets move.
Blackmore.

DISOBEDIE'NT. adj. [dis and obedient.] Not observant of lawful authority; guilty of the breach of lawful commands, or prohibition.

DISPROPO'RTION. n. s. [dis and proportion.] Unsuitableness in form or quantity of one thing, or one part of the same thing, to another; want of symmetry; disparity.

Not to affect many proposed matches
Of her own clime, complexion, and degree,
Whereto we see in all things nature tends:
Foh! one may smell, in such, a will most rank,
Foul disproportion, thoughts unnatural.
Shakesp. Othello.

Reasoning, I oft admire
How nature, wise and frugal, could commit
Such disproportions; with superfluous hand
So many nobler bodies to create,
Greater, so many fold, to this one use. Milton.

Perhaps, from greatness, state and pride,
Thus surprised, she may fall:
Sleep does disproportion hide,
And, death resembling, equals all. Waller

For their strength,
The disproportion is so great, we cannot but Expect a fatal consequence. Denham's Sophy.

What did the liquid to th' assembly call,
To give their aid to form the pond'rous ball?
First tell us, why did any come? next, why
In such a disproportion to the dry?
Blackmore's Creation.

That we are designed for a more exalted happiness than can be derived from the things of this life, we may infer from their vast disproportion to the desires and capacities of our soul. Rogers

To DISPROPO'RTION. v. a. [from the noun.] To mismatch; to join things unsuitable in quantity or form; to join unfitly.

There sits deformity to mock my body,
To shape my legs of an unequal size,
To disproportion me in every part. Shakesp.

Distance and men's fears have so enlarged the truth, and so disproportioned every thing, that we have made the little troop of discontents a gallant army, and already measured by the evening shadow. Suckling.

Musick craveth your acquaintance: many are of such disproportioned spirits, that they avoid her company. Peacham.

We on earth, with undiscording voice,
May rightly answer that melodious noise;
As once we did, till disproportion'd sin
Jarr'd against nature's chime. Milton.

DISPROPO'RTIONABLE. adj. [from disproportion.] Unsuitable in form or quantity; not duly regulated in regard to something else.

Doubts and fears are the sharpest passions: through these false opticks all that you see is like the evening shadows, disproportionable to the truth, and strangely longer than the true substance. Suckling.

Had the obliquity been greater, the earth had not been able to endure the disproportionable differences of season. Brown.

We are apt to set too great a value on temporal blessings, and have too low and disproportionable esteem of spiritual. Smalridge.

There is no wine of so strong a body as to bear such a disproportionable quantity of water as sixty parts. Broome.

1. To hide under false appearance; to conceal; to pretend that not to be which really is.

She answered, that her soul was God's; and touching her faith, as she could not change, so she would not dissemble it. Hayward.

2. To pretend that to be which is not. This is not the true signification.

Your son Lucentio
Doth love my daughter, and she loveth him,
Or both dissemble deeply their affections. Shakesp.

In vain on the dissembled mother's tongue
Had cunning art and sly persuasion hung;
And real care in vain, and native love,
In the true parent's panting breast had strove.
Prior.

To DISSE'MBLE. v. n.

1. To play the hypocrite; to use false professions; to wheedle.

Ye dissembled in your hearts when ye sent me unto the Lord your God, saying, Pray for us. Jeremiah xlii. 20.

I would dissemble with my nature, where
My fortunes, and my friends, at stake, requir'd
I should do so in honour. Shakesp. Coriolanus.

Thy function too will varnish o'er our arts,
And sanctify dissembling. Rowe's Amb. Stepm.

2. Shakespeare uses it for fraudulent; unperforming.

I that am curtail'd of this fair proportion,
Cheated of feature by dissembling nature,
Deform'd, unfinish'd. Shakesp. Richard III.

DISSE'MBLER. n. s. [from dissemble.] An hypocrite; a man who conceals his true disposition.

Thou dost wrong me, thou dissembler, thou. Shakesp.

Ill uses are made of it many times in stirring up seditions, rebellions, in disseminating of heresies, and infusing of prejudices. Hammond's Fundamentals.

There is a nearly uniform and constant fire or heat disseminated throughout the body of the earth. Woodward.

The Jews are indeed disseminated through all the trading parts of the world. Addison's Spectator.

By firmness of mind, and freedom of speech, the gospel was disseminated at first, and must still be maintained. Atterbury.

DISSEMINA'TION. n. s. [disseminatio, Lat.] The act of scattering like seed; the act of sowing or spreading.

Though now at the greatest distance from the beginning of errour, yet we are almost lost in its dissemination, whose ways are boundless, and confess no circumscription. Brown.

DISSEMINA'TOR. n. s. [disseminator, Lat.] He that scatters; a scatterer; a sower; a spreader.

Men, vehemently thirsting after a name in the world, hope to acquire it by being the disseminators of novel doctrines. Decay of Piety.

DISSE'NSION. n. s. [dissensio, Lat.] Disagreement; strife; discord; contention; difference; quarrel; breach of union.

Friend now, fast sworn,
Whose hours, whose bed, whose meal, whose exercise,
Are still together; who twine, as 'twere, in love
Unseparable, shall within this hour,
On a dissension of a doit, break out
To bitterest enmity. Shakesp. Coriolanus.

Now join your hands, and with your hands your hearts,
That no dissension hinder government. Shakesp.

He appeased the dissension then arising about religion. Knolles.

Grown
In wealth and multitude, factious they grow;
But first among the priests dissension springs. Milt.

Debates, dissensions, uproars are thy joy;
Provok'd without offence, and practis'd to destroy. Dryden.

DISSE'NSIOUS. adj. [from dissension.] Disposed to discord; quarrelsome; factious; contentious.

Either in religion they have a dissensious head, or in the commonwealth a factious head. Ascham's Schoolmaster.

Who are they that complain unto the king
That I am stern? They love his grace but lightly,
That fill his ears with such dissensious rumours. Shakesp.

You dissensious rogues,
That rubbing the poor itch of your opinion,
Make yourselves scabs. Shakesp. Coriolanus.

To DISSE'NT. v. n. [dissentio, Lat.]

1. To disagree in opinion; to think in a contrary manner.

Let me not be any occasion to defraud the publick of what is best, by any morose or perverse dissentings. King Charles.

What cruelty of heathens has not been matched by the inhumanity of dissenting Christians? Decay of Piety.

There are many opinions in which multitudes of men dissent from us, who are as good and wise as ourselves. Addison.

2. To differ; to be of a contrary nature.

We see a general agreement in the secret opinion of men, that every man ought to embrace the religion which is true, and to shun, as hurtful, whatever dissenteth from it, but that most which doth farthest dissent. Hooker.

3. To differ from the established church.

How will dissenting brethren relish?
What will malignants say? Hudibras.

DISSE'NT. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Disagreement; difference of opinion; declaration of difference of opinion.

In propositions, where though the proofs in view are of most moment, yet there are grounds to suspect that there is proof as considerable to be produced on the contrary side; there suspense or dissent are voluntary actions. Locke.

What could be the reason of this general dissent from the notion of the resurrection, seeing that almost all of them did believe the immortality of the soul? Bentley's Sermons.

2. Contrariety of nature; opposite quality. Not in use.

The dissents of the menstrual or strong waters may hinder the incorporation, as well as the dissent of the metals. Therefore where the menstrua are the same, and yet the incorporation followeth not, the dissent is in the metals. Bacon.

DISSENTA'NEOUS. adj. [from dissent.] Disagreeable; inconsistent; contrary.

DISSE'NTER. n. s. [from dissent.]

DISSI'MILAR. adj. [dis and similar.] Unlike; heterogeneous.

Simple oil is reduced into dissimilar parts, and yields a sweet oil, very differing from sallet oil. Boyle.

The light, whose rays are all alike refrangible, I call simple, homogeneal, and similar; and that, whose rays are some more refrangible than others, I call compound, heterogeneal, and dissimilar. Newton.

If the fluid be supposed to consist of heterogeneous particles, we cannot conceive how those dissimilar parts can have a like situation. Bentley

DISSIMILA'RITY. n. s. [from dissimilar.] Unlikeness; dissimilitude.

If the principle of reunion has not its energy in this life, whenever the attractions of sense cease, the acquired principles of dissimilarity must repel these beings from their centre: so that the principle of reunion, being set free by death, must drive these beings towards God their centre; and the principle of dissimilarity, forcing him to repel them with infinite violence from him, must make them infinitely miserable. Cheyne.

DISSIMILITUDE. n. s. [dissimilitudo, Lat.] Unlikeness; want of resemblance.

Thereupon grew marvellous dissimilitudes, and by reason thereof jealousies, heartburnings, jars, and discords. Hooker.

We doubt whether the Lord, in different circumstances, did frame his people unto any utter dissimilitude, either with Egyptians, or any other nation. Hooker.

The dissimilitude between the Divinity and images, shews that images are not a suitable means whereby to worship God. Stillingfleet.

As human society is founded in the similitude of some things, so it is promoted by some certain dissimilitudes. Grew.

Women are curious observers of the likeness of children to parents, that they may, upon finding dissimilitude, have the pleasure of hinting unchastity. Pope's Odyssey, Notes.

DISSIMULA'TION. n. s. [dissimulatio, Lat.] The act of dissembling; hypocrisy; fallacious appearance; false pretensions.

Dissimulation is but a faint kind of policy; for it asketh a strong wit, and a strong heart, to know when to tell truth, and to do it. Bacon.

He added not; and Satan, bowing low
His grey dissimulation, disappear'd
Into thin air diffus'd. Milton.

Dissimulation may be taken for a bare concealment of one's mind; in which sense we commonly say, that it is prudence to dissemble injuries. South.

DI'SSIPABLE. adj. [from dissipate.] Easily scattered; liable to dispersion.

The heat of those plants is very dissipable, which under the earth is contained and held in; but when it cometh to the air it exhaleth. Bacon's Natural History.

The parts of plants are very tender, as consisting of corpuscles which are extremely small and light, and therefore the more easily dissipable. Woodward's Natural History.

To DI'SSIPATE. v. a. [dissipatus, Lat.]

1. To scatter every way; to disperse.

The heat at length grows so great, that it again dissipates and bears off those corpuscles which it brought. Woodward.

It is covered with skin and hair, to quench and dissipate the force of any stroke, and retard the edge of any weapon. Ray.

The circling mountains eddy in,
From the bare wild, the dissipated storm. Thomson.

Brown's Vulg. Errours.

To DIVE. v. n. [bippan, Sax.]

1. To sink voluntarily under water.

I am not yet informed, whether when a diver diveth, having his eyes open, and swimmeth upon his back, he sees things in the air greater or less.
Bacon's Nat. Hist.

Around our pole the spiry dragon glides,
And, like a winding stream, the bears divides,
The less and greater; who, by fate's decree,
Abhor to dive beneath the southern sea.
Dryden's Virgil.

That the air in the blood-vessels of live bodies has a communication with the outward air, I think, seems plain, from the experiments of human creatures being able to bear air of much greater density in diving, and of much less upon the tops of mountains, provided the changes be made gradually. Arbuthnot.

2. To go under water in search of any thing.

Crocodiles defend those pearls which lie in the lakes: the poor Indians are eaten up by them, when they dive for the pearl. Raleigh's History.

The knave deserves it, when he tempts the main,
Where folly fights for kings, or dives for gain. Pope.

3. To go deep into any question, doctrine, or science.

The wits that div'd most deep, and sour'd most high,
Seeking man's pow'rs, have found his weakness such. Davies.

He performs all this out of his own fund, without diving into the arts and sciences for a supply. Dryden.

Whensoever we would proceed beyond those simple ideas, and dive farther into the nature of things, we fall presently into darkness and obscurity. Locke.

You swim a-top, and on the surface strive;
But to the depths of nature never dive. Blackmore.

You should have div'd into my inmost thoughts. Philips.

Four great beasts came up from the sea, diverse one from another. Dan. vii. 3.

2. Different from itself; various; multiform; diffused.

Eloquence is a great and diverse thing, nor did she yet ever favour any man so much as to be wholly his. Ben Jonson.

3. In different directions. It is little used but in the last sense.

The gourd
And thirsty cucumber, when they perceive
Th' approaching olive, with resentment fly
Her fatty fibres, and with tendrils creep
Diverse, detesting contact. Philips.

To seize his papers, Curl, was next thy care;
His papers light fly diverse tost in air.
Pope's Dunciad.

DIVERSIFICA'TION. n. s. [from diversify.]

1. The act of changing forms or qualities.

If you consider how variously several things may be compounded, you will not wonder that such fruitful principles, or manners of diversification, should generate differing colours.
Boyle on Colours.

2. Variation; variegation.

3. Variety of forms; multiformity.

4. Change; alteration.

This, which is here called a change of will, is not a change of his will, but a change in the object, which seems to make a diversification of the will, but indeed is the same will diversified.
Hale's Origin of Mankind.

To DIVE'RSIFY. v. a. [diversifier, Fr.]

1. To make different from another; to distinguish; to discriminate.

There may be many species of spirits, as much separated and diversified one from another as the species of sensible things are distinguished one from another. Locke.

Male souls are diversified with so many characters, that the world has not variety of materials sufficient to furnish out their different inclinations.
Addison's Spectator.

It was easier for Homer to find proper sentiments for Grecian generals, than for Milton to diversify his infernal council with proper characters. Addison's Spectator.

2. To make different from itself; to vary; to variegate.

The country being diversified between hills and dales, woods and plains, one place more clear, another more darksome, it is a pleasant picture.
Sidney.

There is, in the producing of some species, a composition of matter, which may be much diversified. Bacon

DIVE'RSION. n. s. [from divert.]

1. The act of turning any thing off from its course.

Bacon's Nat. History.

I have ranked this diversion of Christian practice among the effects of our contentions.
Decay of Piety.

2. The cause by which any thing is turned from its proper course or tendency.

Fortunes, honour, friends,
Are mere diversions from love's proper object,
Which only is itself. Denham's Sophy.

3. Sport; something that unbends the mind by turning it off from care. Diversion seems to be something lighter than amusement, and less forcible than pleasure.

You for those ends whole days in counsil sit,
And the diversions of your youth forget. Waller.

In the book of games and diversions, the reader's mind may be supposed to be relaxed.
Addison's Spectator.

Such productions of wit and humour as expose vice and folly, furnish useful diversions to readers.
Addison's Freeholder.

4. [In war.] The act or purpose of drawing the enemy off from some design, by threatening or attacking a distant part.

DIVE'RSITY n. s. [diversité, Fr. from diversitas, Lat.]

1. Difference; dissimilitude; unlikeness.

Then is there in this diversity no contrariety.
Hooker.

They cannot be divided, but they will prove opposite; and, not resting in a bare diversity, rise into a contrariety. South.

The most common diversity of human constitutions arises from the solid parts, as to their different degrees of strength and tension.
Arbuthnot on Aliment.

2. Variety.

The diversity of ceremonies in this kind ought not to cause dissension in churches. Hooker.

Society cannot subsist without a diversity of stations; and if God should grant every one a middle station, he would defeat the very scheme of happiness proposed in it. Rogers.

3. Distinct being; not identity.

Considering any thing as existing at any determined time and place, we compare it with itself existing at another time, and thereon form the ideas of identity and diversity. Locke.

4. Variegation.

A waving glow his bloomy beds display,
Blushing in bright diversities of day. Pope.

DI'VERSLY. adv. [from diverse.]

1. In different ways; differently; variously.

The lack we all have, as well of ghostly as of earthly favours, is in each kind easily known; but the gifts of God are so diversly bestowed, that it seldom appeareth what all receive: what all stand in need of seldom lieth hid. Hooker.

Both of them do diversly work, as they have their medium diversly disposed. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

Whether the king did permit it to save his purse, or to communicate the envy of a business displeasing to his people, was diversly interpreted.
Bacon.

Leicester bewrayed a desire to plant him in the queen's favour, which was diversly interpreted by such as thought that great artizan of courts to do nothing by chance, nor much by affection. Wotton

The universal matter, which Moses comprehendeth under the names of heaven and earth, is by divers diversly understood. Raleigh's History.

William's arm
Could nought avail, however fam'd in war;
Nor armies leagu'd, that diversly assay'd
To curb his power. Philips.

2. In different directions; to different points.

On life's vast ocean diversly we sail;
Reason the card, but passion is the gale. Pope.

To DIVE'RT. v. a. [diverto, Lat.]

1. To turn off from any direction or course.

I rather will subject me to the malice
Of a diverted blood and bloody brother. Shakesp.

Knots, by the conflux of the meeting sap,
Infect the sound pine, and divert his grain,
Tortive and errant, from his course of growth.
Shakesp.

He finds no reason to have his rent abated, because a greater part of it is diverted from his landlord. Locke.

They diverted raillery from improper objects, and gave a new turn to ridicule. Addison's Freeholder.

Nothing more is requisite for producing all the variety of colours, and degrees of refrangibility, than that the rays of light be bodies of different sizes; the least of which may make violet, the weakest and darkest of the colours, and be more easily diverted by refracting surfaces from the right course; and the rest, as they are bigger and bigger, make the stronger and more lucid colours, blue, green, yellow, and red, and be more and more difficultly diverted. Newton.

2. To draw forces to a different part.

The kings of England would have had an absolute conquest of Ireland, if their whole power had been employed; but still there arose sundry occasions, which divided and diverted their power some other way. Davies on Ireland.

3. To withdraw the mind.

Alas, how simple, to these cates compar'd,
Was that crude apple that diverted Eve!

An earthly paragon: behold divineness
No elder than a boy. Shakesp. Cymbeline.

DIVI'NER. n. s. [from To divine.]

1. One that professes divination, or the art of revealing occult things by supernatural means.

This drudge of the devil, this diviner, laid claim to me, called me Dr nio, and swore I was assured to her; told me what privy marks I had about me. Shakesp. Comedy of Err.

Expelled his oracles, and common temples of delusion, the devil runs into corners, exercising meaner trumperies, and acting his deceits in witches, magicians, diviners, and such inferior seducers. Brown's Vulg. Err.

Conjecturer; guesser.

If he himself be conscious of nothing he then thought on, he must be a notable diviner of thoughts, that can assure him that he was thinking. Locke.

DIVI'NERESS. n. s. [from diviner.] A prophetess; a woman professing divination.

The mad divineress had plainly writ,
A time should come, but many ages yet,
In which sinister destinies ordain,
A dame should drown with all her feather'd train.
Dryden.

DIVI'NITY. n. s. [divinité, Fr. from divinitas, Lat.]

1. Participation of the nature and excellence of God; deity; godhead.

As with new wine intoxicated both,
They swim in mirth, and fancy that they feel
Divinity within them breeding wings,
Wherewith to scorn the earth. Milton.

When he attributes divinity to other things than God, it is only a divinity by way of participation. Stilling fleet.

2. God; the Deity; the Supreme Being; the Cause of causes.

'Tis the Divinity that stirs within us,
'Tis Heav'n itself that points out an hereafter,
And intimates eternity to man. Addison.

3. False god.

Vain idols, deities that ne'er before
In Israel's lands had fix'd their dire abodes,
Beastly divinities, and droves of gods. Prior.

4. Celestial being.

God doubtless can govern this machine he could create, by more direct and easy methods than employing these subservient divinities. Cheyne.

5. The science of divine things; theology.

Hear him but reason in divinity,
And, all admiring, with an inward wish
You would desire the king were made a prelate.
Shakesp.

Trust not my age,
My reverence, calling, nor divinity,
If this sweet lady lie not guiltless here
Under some biting errour. Shakesp.

Among hard words I number those which are peculiar to divinity, as it is a science. Swift.

6. Something supernatural.

They say there is divinity in odd numbers, either in nativity, chance, or death. Shakesp.

DIVISIBLE. adj. [divisibilis, Lat.] Capable of being divided into parts; discerptible; separable.

DIVORCE. n. s. [divorce, Fr. from divortium, Lat.]

1. The legal separation of husband and wife.

Divorce is a lawful separation of husband and wife, made before a competent judge, on due cognizance had of the cause, and sufficient proof made thereof. Ayliffe's Parergon.

To restore the king,
He counsels a divorce, a loss of her,
That like a jewel has hung twenty years
About his neck, yet never lost her lustre.
Shakesp. Henry VIII.

He had in his eye the divorce which had passed betwixt the emperor and Scribonia.
Dryden's Dedication to the Æneid.

2. Separation; disunion.

Such motions may occasion a farther alienation of mind, and divorce of affections, in her, from my religion. K. Charles.

These things, to be a bastard, and to be born out of lawful wedlock, are convertible the one with the other; and 'tis hard to make divorce between those things that are so near in nature to each other, as being convertible terms.
Ayliffe's Parergon.

3. The sentence by which a marriage is dissolved.

4. The cause of any penal separation.

Go with me, like good angels, to my end;
And, as the long divorce of steel falls on me,
Make of your prayers one sweet sacrifice,
And lift my soul to heav'n. Shakesp. Henry VIII.

To DIVO'RCE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To separate a husband or wife from the other.

2. To force asunder; to separate by violence.

Perdition catch my soul
But I do love thee; and when I love thee not,
Chaos is come again. Shakesp. Othello.

11. Sometimes by way of opposition: as, I did love him, but scorn him now.

To DOAT. v. n. See To DOTE.

DO'CIBLE. adj. [docilis, Lat.] Tractable; docile; easy to be taught.

The asinine feast of sow-thistles and brambles is commonly set before them, as all the food and entertainment of their tenderest and most docible age. Milton.

DO'CIBLENESS. n. s. [from docible.] Teachableness; docility; readiness to learn.

I might enlarge in commendation of the noble hound, as also of the docibleness of dogs in general. Walton's Angler.

DO'CILE. adj. [docilis, Lat.]

1. Teachable; easily instructed; tractable.

Dogs soon grow accustomed to whatever they are taught, and being docile and tractable, are very useful. Ellis's Voyage.

2. With to before the thing taught.

Soon docile to the worst acts of ill,
With smiles I could betray, with temper kill. Prior.

DOCI'LITY. n. s. [docilité, Fr. from docilitas, Lat.] Aptness to be taught; readiness to learn.

All the perfection they allowed his understanding was aptness and docility, and all that they attributed to his will was a possibility to be virtuous. South.

What is more admirable than the fitness of every creature for our use? the docility of an elephant, and the insitiency of a camel for travelling in deserts? Grew.

DOCK. n. s. [ɒocca, Sax.] A plant; a weed.

The species are seventeen, ten of which grow wild, several of them being used in medicine; and the sort called the oriental burdock, is said to be the true rhubarb. Miller.

Nothing teems
But hateful docks, rough thistles, kecksies, burs,
Losing both beauty and utility. Shakesp. Henry V.

My love for gentle Dermot faster grows
Than yon tall dock that rises to thy nose:
Cut down the dock, 'twill sprout again; but know,
Love rooted out again will never grow. Swift.

DOCK. n. s.

1. The stump of the tail, which remains after docking.

2. The solid part of the tail.

The tail of a great rhinoceros is not well described by Bontius. The dock is about half an inch thick, and two inches broad, like an apothecary's spatula. Grew's Museum.

DOCK. n. s. [as some imagine of δοχεῖον.] A place where water is let in or out at pleasure, where ships are built or laid up.

The boatswain and mariner may bring religion to what dock they please. Howel.

There are docks for their gallies and men of war, as well as work-houses for all land and naval preparations. Addison.

To DOCK. v. a. [from dock a tail.]

1. To cut off a tail.

2. To cut any thing short.

One or two stood constant centry, who docked all favours handed down; and spread a huge invisible net between the prince and subject, through which nothing of value could pass. Swift's Examiner.

3. To cut off a reckoning; to cut off an entail.

4. To lay the ship in a dock.

DO'CKET. n. s. A direction tied upon goods; a summary of a larger writing. Dict.

DO'CTOR. n. s. [doctor, Lat.]

1. One that has taken the highest degree in the faculties of divinity, law, or physick. In some universities they have doctors of musick. In its original import, it means a man so well versed in his faculty, as to be qualified to teach it.

No woman had it, but a civil doctor,
Who did refuse three thousand ducats of me,
And begg'd the ring Shakesp. Merchant of Venice.

Then stood there up one in the council, a Pharisee, named Gamaliel, a doctor of laws. Acts v. 34.

2. A man skilled in any profession.

Then subtle doctors scriptures made their pride,
Casuists like cocks, struck out each other's eyes. Denham.

Each proselyte would vote his doctor best,
With absolute exclusion to the rest. Dryden

3. A physician; one who undertakes the cure of diseases

By med'cine life may be prolong'd, yet death
Will seize the doctor too. Shakesp. Cymbeline.

How does your patient, doctor?—
—Not so sick, my lord,
As she is troubled with thick coming fancies. Shakesp. Macbeth.

Children will not take those medicines from the doctor's hand, which they will from a nurse or mother. Government of the Tongue

To 'pothecaries let the learn'd prescribe,
That men may die without a double bribe;
Let them but under their superiors kill,
When doctors first have sign'd the bloody bill. Dryden.

He that can cure by recreation, and make pleasure the vehicle of health, is a doctor at it in good earnest. Collier.

In truth, nine parts in ten of those who recovered, owed their lives to the strength of nature and a good constitution, while such one happened to be the doctor. Swift.

4. Any able or learned man.

The simplest person, that can but apprehend and speak sense, is as much judge of it as the greatest doctor in the school. Digby of Bodies.

To DO'CTOR. v. a. [from the noun.] To physick; to cure; to treat with medicines. A low word.

DO'CTORAL. adj. [doctoralis, Lat.] Relating to the degree of a doctor.

DO'CTORSHIP. n. s. [from doctor.] The rank of a doctor.

From a scholar he became a fellow, and then the president of the college, after he had received all the graces and degrees, the proctorship and the doctorship. Clarendon.

DOCTRI'NAL. adj. [doctrina, Lat.]

1. Containing doctrine, or something formally taught.

The verse naturally affords us the doctrinal proposition, which shall be our subject. South.

2. Pertaining to the act or means of teaching

To this end the word of God no otherwise serveth, than only in the nature of a doctrinal instrument. Hooker.

What special property or quality is that, which being no where found but in sermons, maketh them effectual to save souls, and leaveth all other doctrinal means besides destitute of vital efficacy. Hooker.

DOCTRI'NAL. n. s. Something that is part of doctrine.

Not such as assent to every word in scripture, can be said in doctrinals to deny Christ.

DOCTRI'NALLY. adv. [from doctrine.] In the form of doctrine; positively; as necessary to be held.

Scripture accommodates itself to common opinions, and employs the usual [illegible] of speech, without delivering any thing [illegible] concerning these points. Ray.

DO'CTRINE. n. s. [doctrina, Lat.]

1. The principles or positions of any sect or master: that which is taught.

To make new articles of faith and doctrine, no man thinketh it lawful: new laws of government, what church or common wealth is there which maketh not, either at one time or other? Hooker.

Ye are the sons of clergy, who bring all their doctrines fairly to the light, and invite men with freedom to examine them Atterbury.

That great principle in natural philosophy is the doctrine of gravitation, or mutual tendency of all bodies toward each other. Watts's Imp. of the Mind.

3. The act of teaching.

He said unto them in his doctrine. Mark, iv. 2.

DO'CUMENT. n. s. [documentum, Lat.]

1. Precept; instruction; direction.

It is a most necessary instruction and document for them, that as her majesty made them dispensators of her favour, so it behoveth them to shew themselves equal distributors. Bacon.

Learners should not be too much crowded with a heap or multitude of documents or ideas at one time. Watts.

2. Precept, in an ill sense; a precept insolently authoritative, magisterially dogmatical, solemnly trifling.

Gentle insinuations pierce, as oil is the most penetrating of all liquors; but in magisterial documents men think themselves attached, and stand upon their guard. Government of the Tongue.

It is not unnecessary to digest the documents of cracking authors into several classes.

Harvey on Consumptions.

DO'DDER. n. s. [touteren to shoot up, Dut. Skinner.]

Dodder is a singular plant: when it first shoots from the seed it has little roots, which pierce the earth near the roots of other plants; but the capillaments of which it is formed soon after clinging about these plants, the roots wither away. From this time it propagates itself along the stalks of the plant, entangling itself about them. It has no leaves, but consists of capillaments or stalks, brownish with a cast of red, which run to great lengths. They have tubercles, which fix them fast down to the plant, and by means of which they absorb the juices destined for its nourishment. Hill.

DO'DDERED. adj. [from dodder.] Overgrown with dodder; covered with supercrescent plants.

Near the hearth a laurel grew,
Dodder'd with age, whose boughs encompass round
The household gods, and shade the holy ground.
Dryden's Æneid.

The peasants were enjoin'd
Sere-wood, and firs, and dodder'd oaks to find.
Dryden's Fables

DODE'CAGON. n. s. [δώδεκα and γωνία.] A figure of twelve sides.

DODECATEMO'RION. n. s. [δωδεκαμόριον.] The twelfth part.

'Tis dodecatemorion thus describ'd:
Thrice ten degrees, which every sign contains,
Let twelve exhaust, that not one part remains;
It follows streight, that every twelfth confines
Two whole and one half portion of the signs.
Creech.

To DODGE. v. n. [probably corrupted from dog; to shift, and play sly tricks, like a dog.]

1. To use craft; to deal with tergiversation; to play mean tricks; to use low shifts.

If in good offices and due retributions we may not be pinching and niggardly, it argues an earthly and ignoble mind, where we have apparently wronged, to haggle and dodge in the amends.
Hale's Contemplation.

The consideration should make men grow weary of dodging and shewing tricks with God. South.

2. To shift place as another approaches.

For he had, any time this ten years full,
Dodg'd with him betwixt Cambridge and the Bull.
Milton.

3. To play fast and loose; to raise expectations and disappoint them.

You know my passion for Martha, and what a dance she has led me; she dodged with me above thirty years. Addison.

The chaffering with dissenters, and dodging about this or t'other ceremony, is but like opening a few wickets, and leaving them ajar, by which no more than one can get in at a time. Swift.

4. The word in all its senses is low and vulgar.

DO'DKIN. n. s. [duytken, Dut.] A doitkin or little doit; a contemptuous name for a low coin.

Fish that cast their shell are the lobster, the crab, the craw-fish, the hodmandod or dodman, and the tortoise. Bacon.

DOE. n. s. [from ᵭa, Sax. daa, Dan. dama, Lat.] A she deer; the female of a buck.

Then but forbear your food a little while,
While, like a doe, I go to find my fawn,
And give it food. Shakesp. As you like it.

Bucks have horns, does none. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

The fearful doe
And flying stag amidst the greyhounds go.
Dryden's Virgil.

DOE. n. s. [from To do.] A feat; what one has to do; what one can perform.

No sooner he does peep into
The world, but he has done his doe. Hudibras.

DO'ER. n. s. [from To do.]

1. One that does any thing good or bad.

So foul a thing, O! thou injustice art,
That tort'rest both the doer and distrest. Daniel.

It may be indeed a public crime, or a national mischief, yet it is but a private act, and the doer of it may chance to pay his head for his presumption. South.

2. Actor; agent.

Sith thus far we open the things that have been done, let not the principal doers themselves be forgotten. Hooker.

3. Performer.

One judgeth the prize to the best doer, of which they are no less glad than great princes are of triumphs. Sidney.

4. An active, or busy, or valiant person.

Fear not, my lord, we will not stand to prate;
Talkers are no good doers: be assur'd,
We go to use our hands, and not our tongues.
Shakesp.

They are great speakers but small doers; greater in shew than in deed. Knolles's History.

5. One that habitually performs or practises.

Be doers of the word, and not hearers only.
Common Prayer.

In this we shew ourselves weak, and unapt to be doers of his will, in that we take upon us to be controllers of his wisdom. Hooker.

DOES. The third person from do, for doth.

Though lending to foreigners, upon use, doth not at all alter the balance of trade between those countries, yet it does alter the exchange between those countries. Locke.

To DOFF. v. a. [from do off.]

1. To put off dress.

You have deceiv'd our trust,
And made us doff our easy robes of peace,
To crush our old limbs in ungentle steel.
Shakesp. Henry IV.

Doff those links. Milton. Agonistes.

Nature, in awe to him,
Had doff'd her gaudy trim,
With her great master so to sympathize. Milton.

That judge is hot, and doffs his gown.
Dryden's Juvenal.

Alcides doffs the lion's tawny hide. Rowe.

2. To strip; to divest of any thing.

Why art thou troubled, Herod? What vain fear
Thy blood-revolving breast doth move?
Heav'n's king, who doffs himself our flesh to wear,
Comes not to rule in wrath, but serve in love.
Crashaw.

3. To put away; to get rid of.

Your eye in Scotland
Would create soldiers, and make women fight,
To doff their dire distresses. Shakesp. Macbeth.

4. To shift off; to delay; to refer to another time; to put off.

Every day thou doff'st me with some device, Iago; and rather keep'st from me all conveniency, than suppliest me with the least advantage of hope. Shakesp. Othello.

Away, I will not have to do with you.—
—Canst thou so doff me? Shakesp. Much Ado.

5. This word is in all its senses obsolete, and scarcely used except by rusticks; yet it is a pure and commodious word.

DOG. n. s. [dogghe, Dut. canis, Lat.]

1. A domestic animal remarkably various in his species; comprising the mastiff, the spaniel, the bulldog, the greyhound, the hound, the terrier, the cur, with many others. The larger sort are used as a guard; the less for sports.

Such smiling rogues as these sooth every passion:
Renege, affirm, and turn their halcyon beaks
With ev'ry gale and vary of their masters,
As knowing nought, like dogs, but following.
Shakesp. King Lear.

Why should we not think a watch and pistol as distinct species one from another, as a horse and a dog? Locke.

The clamour roars of men, and boys, and dogs.
Thomson.

2. A constellation called Sirius, or Canicula, rising and setting with the sun during the canicular days, or dog days.

Among the southern constellations, two there are who bear the name of the dog; the one in sixteen degrees latitude, containing on the left thigh a star of the first magnitude, usually called Procyon, or Anticanus. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

It parts the twins and crab, the dog divides,
And Argo's keel that broke the frothy tides.
Creech.

3. A reproachful name for a man.

I never heard a passion so confus'd,
So strange, outrageous, and so variable,
As the dog Jew did utter in the streets. Shakesp.

Beware of dogs, beware of evil workers
Phil. iii. 2.

4. To give or send to the Dogs, to throw away. To go to the Dogs; to be ruined, destroyed, or devoured.

Had whole Colepeper's wealth been hops and hogs,
Could he himself have sent it to the dogs? Pope.

5. It is used as the term for the male of several species: as, the dog fox, the dog otter.

If ever I thank any man, I'll thank you; but that they call compliments is like the encounter of two dog apes. Shakesp.

The same ill taste of sense will serve to join
Dog foxes in the yoke, and sheer the swine. Dryd.

6. Dog is a particle added to any thing, to mark meanness, or degeneracy, or worthlessness: as, dog rose.

To DOG. v. a. [from the noun.] To hunt as a dog, insidiously and indefatigably.

I have dogg'd him like his murtherer. Shakesp.

I, his despiteful Juno, sent him forth
From Courtly friends, with camping foes to live,
Where death and danger dog the heels of worth.
Shakesp.

Sorrow dogging sin,
Afflictions sorted. Herbert.

I fear the dread events that dog them both,
Lest some ill-greeting touch attempt the person
Of our renowned sister. Milton.

These spiritual joys are dogged by no sad sequels.
Glanville.

I have been pursued, dogged and way-laid through several nations, and even now scarce think myself secure. Pope.

Hate dogs their rise, and insult mocks their fall.
Vanity of Human Wishes.

DO'GGEREL. adj. [from dog.] Loosed from the measures or rules of regular poety; vile; despicable; mean: used of verses.
Then hasten Og and Doeg to rehearse,
Two fools that crutch their feeble sense on verse;
Who by my muse to all succeeding times
Shall live, in spite of their own dogg'rel rhymes.
Dryden.
Your wit burlesque may one step higher climb,
And in his sphere may judge all dogg'rel rhyme.
Dryden.
It is a dispute among the criticks, whether burlesque poetry runs best in heroick verse, like that of the Dispensary; or in doggerel, like that of Hudibras. Addison's Spectator.

DO'GGEREL. n. s. Mean, despicable, worthless verses.
The hand and head were never lost of those
Who dealt in dogg'rel, or who pin'd in prose.
Dryden's Juvenal.
The vilest dogg'rel Grubstreet sends
Will pass for yours with foes and friends. Swift.

DO'GGISH. adj. [from dog.] Churlish; brutal.

DO'GHEARTED. adj. [dog and heart.] Cruel; pitiless; malicious.

That stript her from his benediction, turn'd her
To foreign casualties, gave her dear rights
To his doghearted daughters. Shakesp. K. Lear.

DO'GHOLE. n. s. [dog and hole.] A vile hole; a mean habitation.
France is a doghole, and it no more merits the tread of a man's foot: to the wars. Shakesp.
But, could you be content to bid adieu
To the dear playhouse, and the players too,
Sweet country seats are purchas'd every where,
With land and gardens, at less price than here
You hire a darksome doghole by the year.
Dryden's Juvenal
Reverse your ornaments, and hang them all
On some patch'd doghole ek'd with ends of wall.
Pope.

DO'GKENNEL. n. s. [dog and kennel.] A little hut or house for dogs.

On us than on the moon. Ben Jonson's Cataline.

After they have lain a little while, they grow as drowsy as dormice, unless they are roused.
Collier on Thought.

DORN. n. s. [from dorn, Ger. a thorn.] The name of a fish; perhaps the same as the thornback.

The coast is stored both with shell-fish, as scallops and sheathfish; and flat, as turbots, dorns, and holybut. Carew.

DO'RNICK. n. s. [of Doornick in Flanders, where first made.] A species of linen cloth used in Scotland for the table.

To DOOR. v. n. [for stupid, Teutonick.] To deafen or stupify with noise. This word I find only in Skinner.

DORR. n. s. [so named probably from the noise which he makes.] A kind of flying insect, remarkable for flying with a loud noise.

Some insects fly with four wings, as all the vaginipennous, or sheath-winged, as beetles and dorrs. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

The dorr or hedge-chafer's chief marks are these: his head is small, like that of the common beetle: this, and his eyes, black: his shoulder-piece, and the middle of his belly, also black; but just under the wing-shells spotted with white. His wing-shells, legs, and the end of his tail, which is long and flat-pointed, of a light chesnut: his breast, especially, covered with a downy hair. Grew's Museum.

DO'RSEL. } n. s. [from dorsum the back.]
DO'RSER. } A pannier; a basket or bag, one of which hangs on either side a beast of burthen, for the reception of things of small bulk. It is corruptly spoken, and perhaps written, dossel.

DORSI'FEROUS. } adj. [dorsum and fero,
DORSI'PAROUS. } or pario, Lat.] Having the property of bearing or bringing forth on the back. It is used of plants that have the seeds on the back of their leaves, as fern; and may be properly used of the American frog, which brings forth young from her back.

DO'RTURE. n. s. [contracted from dormiture; dormitura, Lat. dortoir, Fr.] A dormitory; a place to sleep in.

He led us to a gallery like a dorture, where he shewed us along the one side seventeen cells, very neat. Bacon.

DOSE. n. s. [δόσις.]

1. So much of any medicine as is taken at one time. Quincy.

The too vig'rous dose too fiercely wrought,
And added fury to the strength it brought.
Dryden's Virgil.

In a vehement pain of the head he prescribed the juice of the thapsia in warm water, without mending the dose. Arbuthnot.

2. Any thing nauseous.

If you can tell an ignoramus in power and place that he has a wit and understanding above all the world, I dare undertake that, as fulsome a dose as you give him, he shall readily take it down. South.

3. As much of any thing as falls to a man's lot. Ludicrously.

No sooner does he peep into
The world, but he has done his doe;
Married his punctual dose of wives,
Is cuckolded, and breaks, or thrives. Hudibras.

4. Quantity.

We pity or laugh at those fatuous extravagants, while yet ourselves have a considerable dose of what makes them so. Granville.

5. It is often used of the utmost quantity of strong liquor that a man can swallow. He has his dose; that is, he can carry off no more.

To DOSE. v. a.

1. To proportion a medicine properly to the patient or disease.

Plants seldom used in medicine, being esteemed poisonous, if corrected, and exactly dosed, may prove powerful medicines. Derham's Physico-Theology.

2. To give physick, or any thing nauseous, to any man: in a ludicrous sense.

DO'SSIL. n. s. [corrupted from dorsel, something laid upon the part.] A pledget; a nodule or lump of lint to be laid on a sore.

Her complaints put me upon dressing with such medicaments as basilicon, with præcipitate, upon a dossil. Wiseman.

DOST. [the second person of do.]

Why then dost treat me with rebukes, instead
Of kind condoling cares, and friendly sorrow?
Addison's Cato.

DOT. n. s. [This is derived by Skinner from dotter, Ger. the white of an egg; and interpreted by him a grume of pus. It has now no such signification, and seems rather corrupted from jot a point.] A small point or spot made to mark any place in a writing.

To DOT. v. a. To mark with specks.

To DOT. v. n. [from the noun.] To make dots or spots.

DO'TAGE. n. s. [from dote.]

1. Loss of understanding; imbecility of mind; deliriousness.

The soul in all hath one intelligence,
Though too much moisture in an infant's brain,
And too much driness in an old man's sense,
Cannot the prints of outward things retain:
Then doth the soul want work, and idle sit;
And this we childishness and dotage call. Davies.

I hold, that perfect joy makes all our parts
As joyful as our hearts:
Our senses tell us, if we please not them,
Our love is but a dotage, or a dream. Suckling.

2. Excessive fondness.

If on your head my fury does not turn,
Thank the fond dotage which so much you scorn.
Dryden.

DO'TAL. adj. [dotalis, Lat.] Relating to the portion of a woman; constituting her portion; comprised in her portion.

Shall I, of one poor dotal town possest,
My people thin, my wretched country waste,
An exil'd prince, and on a shaking throne,
Or risk my patron's subjects, or my own?
Garth's Ovid

DO'TARD, n. s. [from dote.] A man whose age has impaired his intellects; a man in his second childhood, called in some provinces a twichild.

Dotard, said he, let be thy deep advise,
Seems that through many years thy wits thee fail,
And that weak old bath left thee nothing wise,
Else never should thy judgment be so frail. Fairy Q.

The sickly dotard wants a wife,
To draw off his last dregs of life. Prior.

DOTA'TION. n. s. [dotatio, Lat.] The act of giving a dowry or portion. Dict.

To DOTE. v. n. [doten, Dut. radoter, Fr.]

1. To have the intellect impaired by age or passion; to be delirious.

Unless the fear of death make me dote,
I see my son. Shakesp. Comedy of Errours.

A sword is upon the liars, and they shall dote: a sword is upon her mighty men, and they shall be dismayed. Jer. l. 36.

Time has made you dote, and vainly tell
Of arms imagin'd in your lonely cell:
Go, be the temple and the gods your care;
Permit to men the thought of peace and war.
Dryden's Æneid.

When an old woman begins to dote, and grow chargeable to a parish, she is turned into a witch, and fills the country with extravagant fancies. Addison's Spectator.

2. To be in love to extremity.

He was stricken with great affection towards me, which since is grown to such a doting love, that I was fain to get this place sometimes to retire in freely. Sidney.

I have long loved her, and bestowed much on her, followed her with a doting observance. Shakes.

To DOTE upon. To regard with excessive fondness; to love to excess.

All their prayers and love
Were set on Hereford, whom they doted on,
And bless'd, and grac'd. Shakesp. Henry IV.

Forgive me, that I do not dream on thee,
Because thou seest me dote upon my love. Shakesp.

All the beauties of the court besides
Are mad in love, and dote upon your person. Denh.

Mark those who dote on arbritary power,
And you shall find 'm either hot-brain'd youth,
Or needy bankrupts. Dryden.

Would you so dote upon your first desire,
As not to entertain a nobler fire Dryden's Ind. Emp.

We dote upon this present world, and the enjoyments of it; and 'tis not without pain and fear, and reluctancy, that we are torn from them, as if our hopes lay all within the compass of this life. Burnet.

O death all eloquent! you only prove
What dust we dote on, when 'tis man we love. Pope.

DO'TED. adj. [from the verb] Stupid. Not used.

His senseless speech and doted ignorance
The prince had marked well. Spenser.

DO'TER. n. s. [from dote.]

1. One whose understanding is impaired by years; a dotard.

What should a bald fellow do with a comb, a dumb doter with a pipe, or a blind man with a looking-glass. Burton.

2. A man fondly, weakly, and excessively in love.

If in black my lady's brow ne deckt,
It mourns that painting and usurping air
Should ravish doters with a false aspect;
And therefore is she born to make black fair. Shak.

Our doters upon red and white are incessantly perplexed by the incertainty both of the continuance of their mistress's kindness, and of the lasting of her beauty. Boyle.

DO'TINGLY. adv. [from doting.] Fondly; by excessive fondness.

That he, to wedlock dotingly betray'd,
Should hope in this lewd town to find a maid!
Dryden's Juvenal.

DO'TTARD. n. s. This word seems to signify a tree kept low by cutting.

For great trees, we see almost all overgrown trees in church-yards, or near ancient buildings, and the like, are pollards and dottards, and not trees at their full height. Bacon.

DO'TTEREL. n. s. [from dote.] The name of a bird that mimicks gestures.

We see how ready apes and monkeys are to imitate all motions of man; and in catching of dotterels, we see how the foolish bird playeth the ape in gestures. Bacon.

DO'UBLE. adj. [double, Fr. duplex, Lat. duple, Erse.]

1. Two of a sort; one corresponding to the other; in pairs.

All things are double one against another, and he hath made nothing imperfect. Ecclus. xlii. 24.

2. Twice as much; containing the same quantity repeated. It is sometimes used with to, and sometimes without.

Great honours are great burthens; but on whom They are cast with envy, he doth bear two loads: His cares must still be double to his joys,
In any dignity. Ben Jonson's Cataline.

The sum of forty thousand pounds is almost double to what is sufficient. Swift's Drap. Letters.

3. Having one added to another; having more than one in the same order or parallel.

It is a curiosity also to make flowers double, which is effected by often removing them into new earth; as, on the contrary part, double flowers, by neglecting, and not removing prove single. Bacon's Nat. History.

I met a reverend, fat, old gouty friar,
With a paunch swoln so high, his double chin
Might rest upon't. Dryden's Span. Friar.

4. Twofold; of two kinds.

Thus cursed steel, and more accursed gold,
Gave mischief birth, and made that mischief bold;
And double death did wretched man invade,
By steel assaulted, and by gold betray'd.
Dryden's Ovid.

No star appears to lend his friendly light;
Darkness and tempest make a double night. Dryd.

5. Two in number.

And if one power did not both see and hear,
Our sights and sounds would always double be.
Davies.

6. Having twice the effect or influence; having the power of two. Not used.

The magnifico is much belov'd,
And hath in his effect a voice potential,
As double as the duke's. Shakesp. Othello.

7. Deceitful; acting two parts, one openly, the other in secret.

I' th' presence
He would say untruths, and be ever double
Both in his words and meaning. Shak. Henry VIII.

Fifty thousand could keep rank, that were not of double heart. 1 Chron. xii. 33.

DOUBLE-PLEA. n. s. [duplex placitum, Lat.] Is that in which the defendant alledges for himself two several matters, in bar of the action, whereof either is sufficient to effect his desire in debarring the plaintiff. Cowell.

DOUBLE-QUARREL, is a complaint made by any clerk or other to the archbishop of the province, against an inferiour ordinary, for delaying justice in some cause ecclesiastical. The effect is, that the archbishop directs his letters, under the authentical seal, to all clerks of his province, commanding them to admonish the said ordinary within nine days to do the justice required, or otherwise to cite him to appear before him or his official; andlastly to intimate to the said ordinary, that if he neither performs the thing enjoined, nor appears at the day assigned, he himself will proceed to perform the justice required. And this seems to be termed a double-quarrel, because it is most commonly made against both the judge, and him at whose petition justice is delayed. Cowell.

DOUBLE. adv. Twice over.

I am not so old in proportion to them as I formerly was, which I can prove by arithmetick; for then I was double their age, which now I am not. Swift.

Double is much used in composition, generally for doubly, two ways; as, double-edged, having an edge on each side: or for twice the number or quantity; as, double-died, twice died.

DOUBLE-BITING. adj. [double and bite.] Biting or cutting on either side.

But most their looks on the black monarch bend,
His rising muscles and his brawn commend;
His double-biting ax, and beamy spear,
Each asking a gigantic force to rear. Dryd. Fables.

DOUBLE BUTTONED. adj. [double and buttoned.] Having two rows of buttons.

Others you'll see when all the town's afloat,
Wrapt in th' embraces of a kersey coat,
Or double-button'd frieze. Gay's Trivia.

DOUBLE-DEALER. n. s. [double and dealer.] A deceitful, subtle, insidious fellow; one who acts two parts at the same time; one who says one thing and thinks another.

Double-dealers may pass muster for awhile; but all parties wash their hands of them in the conclusion. L'Estrange.

DOUBLE-DEALING, n. s. [double and dealing.] Artifice; dissimulation; low or wicked cunning; the action of one thing with the profession of another.

Thou shalt not be the worse for me; there's gold.
—But that it would be double-dealing, Sir I would you could make it another. Shakesp. Twelfth Night.

Our poets have joined together such qualities as are by nature most compatible; valour with anger, meekness with piety, and prudence with dissimulation: this last union was necessary for the goodness of Ulysses; for, without that, his dissimulation might have degenerated into wickedness and double-dealing. Broome's View of Epic Poetry.

To DOUBLE-DIE. v. a. [double and die.] To die twice over.

Yes, I'll to the royal bed,
Where first the mysteries of our love were acted,
And double-die it with imperial crimson.
Dryden and Lee

Myself of many I am charg'd withal. Shak. H. IV

DO'UBTLESS. adv. Without doubt; without question; unquestionably.

Doubtless he would have made a noble knight. Shakesp.

All their desires, deserts, or expectations the Conqueror had no other means to satisfy, but by the estates of such as had appeared open enemies to him, and doubtless many innocent persons suffered in this kind. Hale's Common Law.

Doubtless many men are finally lost, who yet have no men's sins to answer for but their own. South.

Mountains have been doubtless much higher than they are at present: the rains have washed away the soil, that has left the veins of stones shooting out of them. Woodward.

Doubtless, oh guest! great laud and praise were mine,
If, after social rites and gifts bestow'd,
I stain'd my hospitable hearth with blood. Pope's Odyssey.

DOUCE'T. n. s. [douset, Fr.] A custard. This word I find only in Skinner, and in Ainsworth.

DO'UCKER. n. s. [colymbus; from To douck, corrupted from To duck.] A bird that dips in the water.

The colymbi, or douckers, or loons, are admirably conformed for diving, covered with thick plumage, and their feathers so slippery that water cannot moisten them. Ray

DOVE. n. s. [palumbus; duro, old Teutonick; taub, dayb, Germ.]

1. A wild pigeon.

So shews a snowy dove trooping with crows,
As yonder lady o'er her fellows shows.
Shakesp. Romeo and Juliet.

Say, will the falcon, stooping from above,
Smit with her varying plumage, spare the dove?
Pope.

Not half so swift the trembling doves can fly,
When the fierce eagle cleaves the liquid sky;
Not half so swiftly the fierce eagle moves,
When through the skies he drives the trembling doves. Pope.

2. A pigeon.

I have here a dish of doves, that I will bestow upon your worship. Shakesp. Merch. of Venice.

DO'VECOT. n. s. [dove and cot.] A small building, in which pigeons are bred and kept.

Like an eagle in a dovecot, I
Flutter'd your Volscians in Corioli;
Alone I did it. Shakesp. Coriolanus.

DO'VEHOUSE. n. s. [dove and house.] A house for pigeons.

The hawk sets up for protector, and makes havock in the dovehouse. L'Estrange.

DOUGH. n. s. [bah, Sax. deegh, Dut.]

1. The paste of bread, or pies, yet unbaked.

When the gods moulded up the paste of man,
Some of their dough was left upon their hands,
For want of souls, and so they made Egyptians.
Dryden

You that from pliant paste would fabricks raise,
Expecting thence to gain immortal praise,
Your knuckles try, and let your sinews know
Their power to kneed, and give the form to dough.
King.

2. My cake is dough. My affair has miscarried; my undertaking has never come to maturity.

My cake is dough, but I'll in among the rest;
Out of hope of all, but my share of the feast.
Shakesp.

DOUGHBA'KED. adj. [dough and baked.] Unfinished; not hardened to perfection; soft.

For when, through tasteless flat humility,
In doughbak'd men some harmlessness we see,
'Tis but his phlegm that's virtuous, and not he.
Donne.

DO'UGHTY. adj. [ðohtiz, Sax. deught, virtue, Dut.]

1. Brave; noble; illustrious; eminent. Used of men and things.

Such restless passion did all night torment
The flatt'ring courage of that fairy knight,
Devising how that doughty tournament
With greatest honour he atchieven might. Fairy Q.

2. It is now seldom used but ironically, or in burlesque.

If this doughty historian hath any honour or conscience left, he ought to beg pardon. Stillingfleet.

She smil'd to see the doughty hero slain;
But, at her smile, the beau reviv'd again. Pope.

DO'UGHY. adj. [from dough.] Unsound; soft; unhardened.

Your son was misled with a snipt taffata fellow there, whose villainous saffron would have made all the unbaked and doughy youth of a nation in his colour. Shakesp.

To swing i' th' air, or douse in water. Hudibras.

DO'WAGER. n. s. [douairiere, Fr.]

1. A widow with a jointure.

She lingers my desires,
Like to a stepdame or a dowager,
Long wintering on a young man's revenue Shak.

Widows have a greater interest in property than either maids or wives; so that it is as unnatural for a dowager as a freeholder to be an enemy to our constitution. Addison.

2. The title given to ladies who survive their husbands.

Catharine no more
Shall be called queen; but princess dowager,
And widow to prince Arthur. Shak H. VIII.

DO'WDY. n. s. An awkward, illdressed, inelegant woman.

Laura, to his lady, was but a kitchen wench; Dido, a dowdy; Cleopatra, a gipsy; Helen and Hero, sliding and harlots. Shak. Romeo and Juliet.

The bedlam train of lovers use
T' inhance the value, and the faults excuse;
And therefore 'tis no wonder if we see
They doat on dowdies and deformity. Dryden.

DO'WDY. adj. Awkward.

No housewifery the dowdy creature knew;
To sum up all, her tongue confess'd the shrew. Gay.

DO'WER. } DO'WERY. } n. s. [douaire, Fr.]

1. That which the wife bringeth to her husband in marriage.

His wife brought in dow'r Cilicia's crown,
And in herself a greater dow'r alone. Dryden.

His only daughter in a stranger's pow'r;
For very want, he could not pay a dow'r. Pope.

Rich, though depriv'd of all her little store,
For who can seize fair virtue's better dow'r?
Melmouth.

On the downs we see, near Wilton fair,
A hasten'd hare from greedy greyhound go.
Sidney.

Lord of much riches which the use renowns:
Seven thousand broad-tail'd sheep graz'd on his downs. Sandys.

Not all the fleecy wealth
That doth enrich those downs is worth a thought,
To this my errand, and the care it brought.
Milton.

Hills afford pleasant prospects; as they must needs acknowledge who have been on the downs of Sussex. Ray.

How Will-a-wisp misleads night-faring clowns
O'er hills, and sinking bogs, and pathless downs.
Gay.

To compass this, his building is a town,
His pond an ocean, his parterre a down. Pope.

DOWN. prep. [adna, Sax.]

1. Along a descent; from a higher place to a lower.

Let go thy hold when a great wheel runs down hill, lest it break thy neck with following it; but the great one that goes upward, let him draw after. Shakesp. King Lear.

A man falling down a precipice, though in motion, is not at liberty, because he cannot stop that motion if he would. Locke.

4. Out of sight; below the horison.

1. Soft feathers.

Virtue is the roughest way;
But proves at night a bed of down. Wotton.

Leave, leave, fair bride! your softeny bed,
No more shall you return to it alone;
It nurseth sadness: and your body's print,
Like to a grave the yielding down doth dint.
Donne.

We tumble on our down, and court the blessing
Of a short minute's slumber. Denham's Sophy.

A tender weakly constitution is very much owing to the use of down beds. Locke.

2. Any thing that soothes or mollifies.

Thou bosom softness! down of all my cares!
I could recline my thoughts upon this breast
To a forgetfulness of all my griefs,
And yet be happy. Southerne's Oroonoko.

3. Soft wool, or tender hair.

I love my husband still;
But love him as he was when youthful grace,
And the first down, began to shade his face. Dryd.

On thy chin the springing beard began
To spread a doubtful down, and promise man.
Prior.

4. The soft fibres of plants which wing the seeds.

Any light thing that moveth, when we find no wind, sheweth a wind at hand; as when feathers, or down of thistles, fly to and fro in the air.
Bacon's Nat. Hist.

Like scatter'd down, by howling Eurus blown
By rapid whirlwinds from his mansion thrown.
Sandys.

"How goes the night boy?
—The moon is down; I have not heard the clock, And she goes down at twelve. Shakesp. Macbeth.

DRAFF. n. s. [ɒnoꝛ dirty, Sax. draf, Dut.] The sediment of ale.

1. Refuse; lees; dregs: properly something fluid.

You would think I had a hundred and fifty tatter'd prodigals lately come from swinekeeping, from eating draff and husks. Shakesp. Henry IV.

'Twere simple fury, still thyself to waste
On such as have no taste;
To offer them a surfeit of pure bread
Whose appetite is dead!
No, give them grains their fill;
Husks, draff, to drink and swill. Ben Jonson.

I call'd and drew them thither,
My hell-hounds to lick up the draff and filth,
Which man's polluting sin with taint had shed
On what was pure. Milton's Parad. Lost.

Here rather let me drudge, and earn my bread,
Till vermin, or the draff of servile food,
Consume me. Milton's Agonistes.

Such his aspect, when, soil'd with bloody dust,
Dragg'd by the cords, which through his feet were thrust. Denham.

While I have any ability to hold a commerce with you, I will never be silent; and this chancing to be a day that I can hold a pen, I will drag it as long as I am able. Swift.

2. To draw any thing burthensome; any thing from which one cannot disengage one's self.

'Tis long since I, for my celestial wife,
Loath'd by the gods, have dragg'd a ling'ring life. Dryden.

Can I, who lov'd so well,
To part with all my bliss to save my lover,
Oh! can I drag a wretched life without him?
Smith.

3. To draw contemptuously along, as a thing unworthy to be carried.

He triumphs in St. Austin's opinion; and is not only content to drag me at his chariot-wheels, but he makes a shew of me. Stilling fleet.

4. To pull about with violence and ignominy.

They shall surprise
The serpent, prince of air, and drag in chains
Through all his realm, and there confounded leave. Milton.

The constable was no sooner espied but he was reproached with disdainful words, beaten and dragged in so barbarous a manner, that he hardly escaped with his life. Clarendon.

5. To pull roughly and forcibly.

To fall, that 's justice;
But then, to drag him after! For to die,
And yet in death to conquer, is my wish. Dryd.

In my fatal cause your sword was drawn;
The weight of my misfortunes dragg'd you down.
Dryden.

To* DRAG. v. n. To hang so low as to trail or grate upon the ground.

From hence are heard the groans of ghosts, the pains
Of sounding lashes, and of dragging chains. Dry.

A door is said to drag, when, by its ill hanging on its hinges, the bottom edge of the door rides in its sweep upon the floor. Moxon's Mech. Exer.

DRAG. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. A net drawn along the bottom of the water.

Casting nets were spread in shallow brooks,
Drags in the deeps, and baits were hung on hooks.
Dryden.

The creatures are but instruments in God's hand: the returning our acknowledgments to them is just the same absurdity with theirs who burnt incense to the drag, and sacrificed to the net. Rogers.

2. An instrument with hooks to catch hold of things under water.

You may in the morning find it near to some fixed place, and then take it up with a drag hook, or otherwise. Walton.

3. A kind of car drawn by the hand.

The drag is made somewhat like a low car: it is used for the carriage of timber, and then is drawn by the handle by two or more men. Moxon's Mech. Exer.

To* DRA'GGLE. v. a. [from drag.] To make dirty by dragging on the ground.

You'll see a draggled damsel, here and there,
From Billingsgate her fishy traffick bear.

I have not yet found certainly, that the water itself by mixture of ashes, or dust, will shrink or draw into less room. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

4. To advance; to move; to make progression any way.

You were, Jupiter, a swan, for the love of Leda: Oh! omnipotent love! how near the god drew to the complexion of a goose. Shakesp.
Draw ye near hither all the chief of the people.
1 Sam.
He ended; and th' archangel soon drew nigh,
Not in his shape celestial, but as man
Clad to meet man Milton's Parad. Lost.
They returned to the camp where the king was, and the Scots drew a little back to a more convenient post for their residence. Clarendon.
Ambitious meteors! how willing they are to set themselves upon the wing, taking every occasion of drawing upward to the sun. Dryd. Don Sebast.
Now nearer to the Stygian lake they draw,
Whom from the shore the surly boatman saw,
Observ'd their passage through the shady wood,
And mark'd their near approaches to the flood. Dr.
And now I faint with grief; my fate draws nigh,
In all the pride of blooming youth I die. Ad Ovid.

5. To draw together; to be collected; to come together.

They muster there, and round the centre swarm,
And draw together in a globose form. Blackm.

6. To draw a sword.

For his sake
Did I expose myself, pure; for his love
Drew to defend him, when he was beset. Shakesp.

7. To practise the art of delineation.

So much insight into perspective, and skill in drawing, as will enable him to represent tolerably on paper any thing he sees, should be got. Locke.

8. To take a card out of the pack; to take a lot.

He has drawn a black, and smiles. Dryden.

9. To make a sure run by attraction.

10. To draw off. To retire; to retreat.

When the engagement proves unlucky, the way is to draw off by degrees, and not to come to an open rupture. Collier.

11. To draw on. To advance; to approach.

The fatal day draws on, when I must fall. Dry.

12. To draw up. To form troops into regular order.

The lord Bernard, with the king's troops seeing there was no enemy left on that side, drew up in a large field opposite to the bridge. Clarendon.

13. To draw retains through all its varieties of use, some shade of its original meaning, to pull. It expresses an action, gradual or continuous, and leisurely. Thus we forge a sword by blows, but we draw it by a continued line. We pour liquor quick, but we draw it in a continued stream. We force compliance by threats, but we draw it by gradual prevalence. We write a letter with whatever haste, but we draw a bill with slow scrupulosity.

DRAW. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. The act of drawing.
2. The lot or chance drawn.

DRA'WBACK. n. s. [draw and back.] Money paid back for ready payment, or any other reason.

In poundage and drawbacks I lose half my rent; Whatever they give me, I must be content. Swift.

DRAWBRIDGE. n. s. [draw and bridge.] A bridge made to be lifted up, to hinder or admit communication at pleasure.

Half the buildings were raised on the continent, and the other half on an island, continued together by a drawbridge. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

If we make a drawn game of it, or procure but moderate advantages, every British heart must tremble. Addison.

2. With a sword drawn.

What, art thou drawn amongst those heartless hinds? Shakesp.

3. Open; put aside, or unclosed.

A curtain drawn presented to our view
A town besieg'd. Dryden's Tyrannic Love.

4. Eviscerated.

There is no more faith in thee than in a stoned prune; no more truth in thee than in a drawn fox. Shakesp.

5. Induced as from some motive.

The Irish will better be drawn to the English, than the English to the Irish government. Spenser on Ireland.

As this friendship was drawn together by fear on both sides, so it was not like to be more durable than was the fear. Hayward.

DRA'WWELL. n. s. [draw and well.] A deep well; a well out of which water is drawn by a long cord.

The first conceit, tending to a watch, was a drawwell: the people of old were wont only to let down a pitcher with a handcord, for as much water as they could easily pull up. Grew.

To DRAWL. v. n. [from draw.] To utter any thing in a slow, driveling way.

Then mount the clerks, and in one lazy tone
Through the long heavy page drawl on. Pope.

DRAY. } n. s. [bnaz, Sax.] The
DRA'YCART. } car on which beer is carried.

Let him be brought into the field of election upon his draycart, and I will meet him there in a triumphant chariot. Addison

When drays bound high, then never cross behind
Where bubbling yest is blown by gusts of wind. Gay.

DRA'YHORSE. n. s. [dray and horse.] A horse which draws a dray.

This truth is illustrated by a discourse on the nature of the elephant and the drayhorse. Tatler

DRA'YMAN. n. s. [dray and man.] One that attends a dray or cart.

A brace of draymen bid God speed him well,
And had the tribute of his supple knee. Shakesp.

Have not coblers, draymen, and mechanicks governed as well as preached? Nay, have not they by preaching come to govern? South.

DRA'YPLOUGH. n. s. [dray and plough.] A plough of a particular kind.

The drayplough is the best plough in winter for miry clays. Mortimer's Husbandry.

DRA'ZEL. n. s. [perhaps corrupted from drossel the scum or dross of human nature; or from drosiesse, Fr. a whore.] A low, mean, worthless wretch.

As the devil uses witches,
To be their cully for a space,
That, when the time's expir'd, the drazels
For ever may become his vassals. Hudibras.

DREAD. n. s. [bnab, Sax.]

1. Fear; terrour; affright; horrour either felt or impressed.

Think'st thou that duty shall have dread to speak,
When pow'r to flatt'ry bows? To plainness honour
Is bound, when majesty to folly falls. Shakesp. King Lear.

Let not my dread make me afraid. Job.

Was ever any wicked man free from the stings of a guilty conscience, from that secret dread of divine displeasure, and of the vengeance of another world? Tillotson.

If our fears can be awakened with the dread of evil, he has armed his laws with the terrour of eternal misery. Rogers.

2. Habitual fear; awe.

The fear of you, and the dread of you, shall be upon every beast of the earth. Gen. ix.

3. The person or thing feared; the cause of fear.

Let him be your dread. Isaiah.

To thee, of all our good the sacred spring;
To thee, our dearest dread; to thee, our softer king. Prior.

DREAD. adj. [bnab, Sax.]

1. Terrible; frightful.

That e'er this tongue of mine,
That laid the sentence of dread banishment
On yond' proud man, should take it off again
With words of sooth! Shakesp. Richard II.

It cannot be, but thou hast murther'd him;
So should a murtherer look, so dread, so grim. Shak.

To be expos'd against the warring winds;
To stand against the deep dread bolted thunder. Shakesp.

Terrour seiz'd the rebel host,
When, coming towards them, so dread they saw
The bottom of the mountains upward turn'd. Milt.

2. Awful; venerable in the highest degree.

Thou, attended gloriously from heav'n,
Shalt in the sky appear, and from thee send
The summoning archangels to proclaim
Thy dread tribunal. Milton's Parad. Lost.

From this descent
Celestial virtues rising will appear
More glorious and more dread than from no fall. Milton.

3. This seems to be the meaning of that controverted phrase, dread majesty. Some of the old acts of parliament are said in the preface to be metuendissimi regis, our dread sovereign's.

To DREAD. v. a. [from the noun.] To fear in an excessive degree.

You may despise that which terrifies others, and which yet all, even those who most dread it, must in a little time encounter. Wake.

To DREAD. v. n. To be in fear.

Dread not, neither be afraid of them. Deut. i. 8.

Is dreadful as thy hate. Granville.

2. Awful; venerable.

How dreadful is this place! Genesis.

DRE'ADFULNESS. n. s. [from dreadful.] Terribleness; frightfulness.

It may justly serve for matter of extreme terrour to the wicked, whether they regard the dreadfulness of the day in which they shall be tried, or the quality of the judge by whom they are to be tried. Hakewill on Providence.

DRE'ADFULLY. adv. [from dreadful.] Terribly; frightfully.

Not sharp revenge, nor hell itself, can find
A fiercer torment than a guilty mind,
Which day and night doth dreadfully accuse,
Condemns the wretch, and still the charge renews. Dryden.

DRE'ADLESS. adj. [from dread.] Fearless; unaffrighted; intrepid; unshaken; undaunted; free from terrour.

Dreadless, said he, that shall I soon declare;
It was complain'd, that thou hadst done great tort
Unto an aged woman. Fairy Queen.
All night the dreadless angel, unpursued,
Through heav'n's wide champaign held his way.
Milton.

DRE'ADLESSNESS. n. s. [from dreadless.] Fearlessness; intrepidity; undauntedness.

Zelmane, to whom danger then was a cause of dreadlessness, all the composition of her elements being nothing but fiery, with swiftness of desire crossed him. Sidney.

DREAM. n. s. [droom, Dut.] This word is derived by Meric Casaubon, with more ingenuity than truth, from δρᾶμα τὸ βίου the comedy of life; dreams being, as plays are, a representation of something which does not really happen. This conceit Junius has enlarged by quoting an epigram:

Σκιὴ σὰς ὁ βίος· κ᾽ οὐ παίγνιον ἢ μαθὲ παίζειν,
Τὴν σπουδὴν μεταδοὺς, ἢ φίλε τὰς ὀδύνας.
Anthol.]

1. A phantasm of sleep; the thoughts of a sleeping man.

We eat our meat in fear, and sleep
In the affliction of those terrible dreams
That shake us nightly. Shakesp. Macbeth.
In dreams they fearful precipices tread;
Or shipwreck'd, labour to some distant shore.
Dryden.
Glorious dreams stand ready to restore
The pleasing shapes of all you saw before. Dryden.

2. An idle fancy; a wild conceit; a groundless suspicion.

Let him keep
A hundred knights; yes, that on ev'ry dream,
Each buz, each fancy, each complaint, dislike,
He may enguard his dotage. Shakesp. King Lear.

To DREAM. v. n. preter. dreamed, or dreamt. [from the noun.]

1. To have the representation of someing in sleep.

Dreaming is the having of ideas, whilst the outward senses are stopped, not suggested by any external objects, or known occasion, nor under the rule or conduct of the understanding. Locke.
I dreamed that I was conveyed into a wide and boundless plain. Tatler.

2. It has of before the noun.

I have long dream'd of such a kind of man,
But, being awake, I do despise my dream. Shak.
I have nightly since
Dreamt of encounters 'twixt thyself and me:
We have been down together in my sleep,
Unbuckling helms, fisting each other's throat,
And wak'd half dead with nothing. Shak. Coriol.

3. To think; to imagine.

These boys know little they are sons to th' king,
Nor Cymbeline dreams that they are alive. Shak.
He never dreamed of the deluge, nor thought that first orb more than a transient crust.
Burnet's Theory.
He little dream'd how nigh he was to care,
Till treach'rous fortune caught him in the snare.
Dryden.

4. To think idly.

They dream on in a constant course of reading, but not digesting. Locke.
I began to dream of nothing less than the immortality of my work. Smith.

5. To be sluggish; to idle.

Why does Anthony dream out his hours,
And tempts not fortune for a noble day? Dryden.

To DREAM. v. a. To see in a dream.

The Macedon, by Jove's decree,
Was taught to dream an herb for Ptolemy. Dryd.
At length in sleep their bodies they compose,
And dreamt the future sight, and early rose. Dryd.

DRE'AMER. n. s. [from dream.]

1. Who has dreams; one who has fancies in his sleep.

The vision said, and vanish'd from his sight;
The dreamer waken'd in a mortal fright. Dryden.
If our dreamer pleases to try whether the glowing heat of a glass furnace be barely a wandering imagination in a drowsy man's fancy, by putting his head into it, he may perhaps be wakened into a certainty. Locke.

2. An idle fanciful man; a visionary.

Sometimes he angers me
With telling of the moldwarp and the ant,
Of dreamer Merlin, and his prophecies. Shakesp.

3. A mope; a man lost in wild imagination; a reveur.

The man of sense his meat devours,
But only smells the peel and flow'rs;
And he must be an idle dreamer,
Who leaves the pie and gnaws the streamer. Prior.

4. A sluggard; an idler.

DRE'AMLESS. adj. [from dream] Without dreams.

The savages of Mount Atlas, in Barbary, were reported to be both nameless and dreamless.
Camden's Remains.

The ill-fac'd owl, death's dreadful messenger;
The hoarse night raven, trump of doleful drear.
Spenser.

DREAR. adj. [ðreorig, Sax. dreary.] Mournful; dismal; sorrowful.

In urns and altars round,
A drear and dying sound
Affrights the flamens at their service quaint.
Milton.

DRE'ARIHEAD. n. s. [from dreary.] Horrour; dismalness: a word now no longer in use.

That shortly from the shape of womanhed,
Such as she was when Pallas she attempted,
She grew to hideous shape of drearihead,
Pined with grief of folly late repented. Spenser.

DRE'ARIMENT. n. s. [from dreary.]

1. Sorrow; dismalness; melancholy.

I teach the woods and waters to lament
Your doleful dreariment. Spenser's Epithalamium.

2. Horrour; dread; terrour. This word is now obsolete.

Almighty Jove, in wrathful mood,
To wreak the guilt of mortal sins is bent;
Hurl's forth his thundering dart with deadly feud,
Inroll'd in flames and smouldring dreariment.
Fairy Queen.

DRE'ARY. adj. [ðreorig, Sax.]

1. Sorrowful; distressful.

The messenger of death, the ghastly owl,
With dreary shrieks did also yell;
And hungry wolves continually did howl
At her abhorred face, so horrid and so foul.
Fairy Queen.

2. Gloomy; dismal; horrid.

Obscure they went through dreary shades, that led
Along the vast dominions of the dead. Dryden.
Towns, forests, herds, and men promiscuous drown'd,
With one great death deform the dreary ground.
Prior.

3. This word is scarcely used but in poetical diction.

DREDGE. n. s. [To dretch, in Chaucer, is to delay; perhaps a net so often stopped may be called from this.] A kind of net.

For oysters they have a peculiar dredge; a thick, strong net, fastened to three spills of iron, and drawn at the boat's stern, gathering whatsoever it meeteth lying in the bottom. Carew.

To DREDGE. v. a. [from the noun] To gather with a dredge.

The oysters dredged in the Lyne find a welcome acceptance. Carew.

DRE'DGER. n. s. [from dredge.] One who fishes with a dredge.

DRE'GGISH. adj. [from dregs.] Foul with lees; feculent.

To give a strong taste to this dreggish liquor, they fling in an incredible deal of broom or hops, whereby small beer is rendered equal in mischief to strong. Harvey on Consumptions.

DRE'GGY. adj. [from dregs.] Containing dregs; consisting of dregs; muddy; feculent.

These num'rous veins, such is the curious frame,
Receive the pure insinuating stream;
But no corrupt or dreggy parts admit,
To form the blood or feed the limbs unfit. Blackm.
Ripe grapes being moderately pressed, their juice may, without much dreggy matter, be squeezed out. Boyle.

DREGS. n. s. [ðrægten, Sax. dreggian, Islandick.]

1. The sediment of liquors; the lees; the grounds; the feculence.

Fain would we make him author of the wine,
If for the dregs we would some other blame. Davies.
They often tread destruction's horrid path,
And drink the dregs of the revenger's wrath. Sandys.
We from the dregs of life think to receive
What the first sprightly running could not give.
Dryden.
Such run on poets in a raging vein,
Ev'n to the dregs and squeezings of the brain. Pope.

2. Any thing by which purity is corrupted.

The king by this journey purged a little the dregs and leaven of the northern people, that were before in no good affections towards him. Bacon.

3. Dross; sweepings; refuse.

Heav'n's favourite thou, for better fates design'd
Than we, the dregs and rubbish of mankind. Dryd.
What diffidence we must be under whether God will regard our sacrifice, when we have nothing to offer him but the dregs and refuse of life, the days of loathing and satiety, and the years in which we have no pleasure. Rogers.

To DREIN. v. n. [See DRAIN.] To empty. The same with drain: spelt differently perhaps by chance.

She is the sluice of her lady's secrets: 'tis but setting her mill a-going, and I can drein her of them all. Congreve.
'Tis drein'd and emptied of its poison now;
A cordial draught. Southern

To DRENCH. v. a. [ðrencan, Sax.]

1. To wash; to soak; to steep.

If any of your cattle are infected, speedily let both sick and well blood, and drench them.
Mortimer's Husbandry.

DRENCH. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. A draught; a swill: by way of abhorrence or contempt.

Let such bethink them, if the sleepy drench
Of that forgetful lake benumb not still,
That in our proper motion we ascend. Milton

2. Physick for a brute.

A drench is a potion or drink prepared for a sick horse, and composed of several drugs in a liquid form. Farrier's Dict.

Harry, says she, how many hast thou kill'd today? Give my roan horse a drench, says he; and answers, fourteen, an hour after. Shak. Hen. IV.

A drench of wine has with success been us'd,
And through a horn the gen'rous juice infus'd.
Dryden.

3. Physick that must be given by violence.

Their counsels are more like a drench that must be poured down, than a draught which must be leisurely drank if I liked it. King Charles.

4. A channel of water.

DRE'NCHER. n. s. [from drench.]

1. One that dips or steeps any thing.

2. One that gives physick by force. Dict.

DRENT. participle. Probably corrupted from drenched, to make a proverbial rhyme to brent, or burnt.

What flames, quoth he, when I the present see
In danger rather to be drent than brent? Fairy Q.

To DRESS. v. a. [dresser, Fr.]

1. To clothe; to invest with clothes.

The first request
He made, was, like his brothers to be dress'd;
And, as his birth requir'd, above the rest. Dryden.

2. To clothe pompously or elegantly. It is used with up and out to enforce it.

Look upon pleasures not upon that side that is next the sun, or where they look beauteously; that is, as they come towards you to be enjoyed; for then they paint and smile, and dress themselves up in tinsel, and glass gems, and counterfeit imagery. Taylor.

Few admir'd the native red and white,
Till poets dress'd them up to charm the sight.
Dryden.

Lollia Paulina wore, in jewels, when dressed out, the value of three hundred twenty-two thousand nine hundred and sixteen pounds thirteen shillings and four-pence. Arbuthnot.

3. The bench in a kitchen on which meat is drest or prepared for the table.

'Tis burnt, and so is all the meat.
What dogs are these! Where is the rascal cook?
How durst you, villains! bring it from the dresser,
And serve it thus to me that love it not? Shakesp.

A maple dresser in her hall she had,
On which full many a slender meal she made. Dryd.

When you take down dishes, tip a dozen upon the dresser. Swift's Directions to the Cook.

DRE'SSING. n. s. [from dress.] The application made to a sore.

The second day after we took off the dressings, and found an eschar made by the cathcretick. Wiseman on Tumours.

DRE'SSING-ROOM. n. s. [dress and room.] The room in which clothes are put on.

Latin books might be found every day in his dressing-room, if it were carefully searched. Swift.

DREST. part. [from dress.]

In flow'ry wreaths the royal virgin drest
His bending horns, and kindly clapt his breast.
Addison.

To DRIB. v. a. [contracted from dribble.] To crop; to cut off; to defalcate. A cant word.

Merchants gains come short of half the mart;
For he who drives their bargains dribs a part.
Dryden.

To DRIBBLE. v. n. [This word seems to have come from drop by successive alterations, such as are usual in living languages: drop, drip, dripple, dribble, from thence drivel and driveller. Drip may indeed be the original word from the Danish drypp.]

1. To fall in drops.

Semilunar processes on the surface owe their form to the dribbling of water that passed over it. Woodward on Fossils.

A dribbling difficulty, and a momentary suppression of urine, may be caused by the stone's shutting up the orifice of the bladder. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

2. To fall weakly and slowly.

Believe not that the dribbling dart of love
Can pierce a complete bosom. Shakesp.

3. To slaver as a child or ideot.

To DRI'BBLE. v. a. To throw down in drops.

Let the cook follow with a ladle full of soup, and dribble it all the way up stairs. Swift's Rules to Servants.

DRI'BLET. n. s. [from dribble.] A small sum; odd money in a sum.

Twelve long years of exile borne,
Twice twelve we number'd since his blest return;
So strictly wert thou just to pay,
Even to the dribblet of a day. Dryden.

DRI'ER. n. s. [from dry.] That which has the quality of absorbing moisture; a desiccative.

There is a tale, that boiling of daisy roots in milk, which it is certain are great driers, will make dogs little. Bacon.

DRIFT. n. s. [from drive.]

1. Force impellent; impulse; overbearing influence.

A man being under the drift of any passion, will still follow the impulse of it till something interpose, and, by a stronger impulse, turn him another way. South.

2. Violence; course.

The mighty trunk, half rent with rugged rift,
Doth roll adown the rocks, and fall with fearful drift. Fairy Queen.

3. Any thing driven at random.

Some log, perhaps, upon the waters swam,
An useless drift, which rudely cut within,
And hollow'd, first a floating trough became,
And cross some riv'let passage did begin. Dryden.

4. Any thing driven or born along in a body.

The ready racers stand;
Swift as on wings of wind upborne they fly,
And drifts of rising dust involve the sky.
Pope's Odyssey

5. A storm; a shower.

Our thunder from the south
Shall rain their drift of bullets on this town. Shak.

6. A heap or stratum of any matter thrown together by the wind: as, a snowdrift, a deep body of snow.

7. Tendency or aim of action.

The particular drift of every act, proceeding eternally from God, we are not able to discern; and therefore cannot always give the proper and certain reason of his works. Hooker.

Their drift comes known, and they discover'd are;
For some, of many, will be false of course. Daniel.

8. Scope of a discourse.

The main drift of his book being to prove, that what is true is impossible to be false, he opposes nobody. Tillotson.

The drift of the pamphlet is to stir up our compassion towards the rebels. Addison

This, by the stile, the manner, and the drift,
'Twas thought could be the work of none but Swift. Swift.

To DRIFT. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To drive; to urge along.

Snow, no larger than so many grains of sand, drifted with the wind in clouds from every plain. Ellis's Voyage.

2. To throw together on heaps. Not authorised.

He wanders on
From hill to dale, still more and more astray,
Impatient flouncing through the drifted heaps.
Thomson.

To DRILL. v. a. [drillen, Dut. ᵹɒlian, Sax. from ᵹuᵹh through.]

1. To pierce any thing with a drill.

The drill-plate is only a piece of flat iron, fixed upon a flat board, which iron hath an hole punched a little way into it, to set the blunt end of the shank of the drill in, when you drill a hole. Moxon's Mechanical Exercises.

2. To perforate; to bore; to pierce.

My body through and through he drill'd,
And Whacum by my side lay kill'd. Hudibras.

Tell, what could drill and perforate the poles,
And to th' attractive rays adapt their holes?
Blackmore.

3. To make a hole.

When a hole is drilled in a piece of metal, they hold the drill-bow in their right hand; but, when they turn small work, they hold the drill-bow in their left hand. Moxon.

4. To delay; to put off: in low phrase; corrupted, I believe, from drawled.

She has bubbled him out of his youth: she drilled him on to five-and-fifty, and she will drop him in his old age. Addison.

5. To draw from step to step. A low phrase.

When by such insinuations they have once got within him, and are able to drill him on from one lewdness to another, by the same arts they corrupt and squeeze him. South.

6. To drain; to draw slowly. This sense wants better authority.

Drill'd through the sandy stratum every way,
The waters with the sandy stratum rise. Thomson.

7. To form to arms; to teach the military exercise. An old cant word.

The foe appear'd drawn up and drill'd,
Ready to charge them in the field. Hudibras.

DRILL. n. s. [from the noun.]

1. An instrument with which holes are bored. It is a point pressed hard against the thing bored, and turned round with a bow and string.

The way of tempering steel to make gravers, drills, and mechanical instruments, we have taught artificers. Boyle.

Drills are used for the making such holes as punches will not serve for; as a piece of work that hath already its shape, and must have an hole made in it. Moxon.

2. An ape; a baboon.

Shall the difference of hair be a mark of a different internal specifick constitution between a changeling and a drill, when they agree in shape and want of reason? Locke.

3. A small dribbling brook. This I have found no where else, and suspect it should be rill.

Springs through the pleasant meadows pour their drills,
Which snake-like glide between the bordering hills. Sandys.

To DRINK. v. n. preter. drank*, or drunk; part. pass. drunk*, or drunken. [druncan, Sax.]

1. To swallow liquors; to quench thirst.

Here, between the armies,
Let's drink together friendly, and embrace. Shak.

She said, drink, and I will give thy camels drink also; so I drank, and she made the camels drink also. Gen. xxiv. 46.

He drank of the wine. Gen. ix. 21.

When delight is the only end, and rests in itself, and dwells there long, then eating and drinking is not a serving of God, but an inordinate action. Taylor's Rule of Living Holy.

2. To feast; to be entertained with liquors.

We came to fight you.——For my part, I am sorry it is turned to a drinking. Shakesp. Antony and Cleopatra.

3. To drink to excess; to be an habitual drunkard. A colloquial phrase.

4. To drink to. To salute in drinking; to invite to drink by drinking first.

I take your princely word for those redresses.
—I gave it you, and will maintain my word;
And thereupon I drink unto your grace. Shakesp.

5. To drink to. To wish well to in the act of taking the cup.

Give me some wine; fill full:
I drink to th' general joy of the whole table,
And to our dear friend Banquo, whom we miss.
Shakesp.

I'll drink to master Bardolph, and to all the cavaleroes about London. Shakesp.

To DRINK. v. a.

1. To swallow: applied to liquids.

He had eaten no bread, nor drunk any water, three days and three nights. 1 Sam. xxx. 12.

We have drunken our water for money. Sam. v. 4.

2. To suck up; to absorb.

Set rows of rosemary with flow'ring stem,
And let the purple violets drink the stream. Dryd.

Brush not thy sweeping skirt too near the wall;
Thy heedless sleeve will drink the colour'd oil. Gay.

3. To take in by any inlet; to hear; to see.

My ears have yet not drunk a hundred words
Of that tongue's uttering, yet I know the sound.
Shakesp.

Thither write, my queen;
And with mine eyes I'll drink the words you send,
Though ink be made of gall. Shakesp. Cymbeline.

Phemius! let acts of gods, and heroes old,
What ancient bards in hall and bow'r have told,
Attemper'd to the lyre, your voice employ;
Such the pleas'd ear will drink with silent joy. Pope.

I drink delicious poison from thy eye. Pope.

4. To act upon by drinking.

Come, we have a hot venison pasty to dinner: come, gentlemen, I hope we shall drink down all unkindness. Shakesp.

He will drown his health and his strength in his belly; and, after all his drunken trophies, at length drink down himself too. South.

5. To make drunk.

Benhadad was drinking himself drunk in the pavilions. 1 Kings.

6. It is used with the intensive particles off, up, and in. Off, to note a single act of drinking.

One man gives another a cup of poison, a thing as terrible as death; but at the same time he tells him that it is a cordial, and so he drinks it off, and dies. South.

7. Up, to note that the whole is drunk.

Alexander, after he had drank up a cup of fourteen pints, was going to take another. Arb. on Coins.

8. In, to enforce the sense: usually of inanimate things.

The body being reduced nearer unto the earth, and emptied, he cometh more porous, and greedily drinketh in water. Brown's Vulg. Err.

DRINK. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Liquor to be swallowed: opposed to meat.

When God made choice to rear
His mighty champion, strong above compare,
Whose drink was only from the liquid brook! Milt.

2. Liquor of any particular kind.

We will give you rare and sleepy drinks. Shakesp. Winter's Tale.

The juices of fruits are either watery or oily: I reckon among the watery all the fruits out of which drink is expressed, as the grape, the apple, and the pear. Bacon.

O madness, to think use of strongest wines,
And strongest drinks, our chief support of health! Milton.

These, when th' allotted orb of time's complete,
Are more commended than the labour'd drink. Philips.

Amongst drinks, austere wines are apt to occasion foul eruptions. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

DRINK-MONEY. n. s. [drink and money.] Money given to buy liquor.

Peg's servants were always asking for drink-money. Arbuthnot.

DRI'NKABLE. adj. [from drink.] Potable; such as may be drank.

DRI'NKER. n. s. [from drink.] One that drinks to excess; a drunkard.

It were good for those that have moist brains, and are great drinkers, to take fume of lignum, aloes, rosemary, and frankincense, about the full of the moon. Bacon.

The drinker and debauched person is the object of scorn and contempt. South.

The urine of hard drinkers affords a liquor extremely fetid, but no inflammable spirit: what is inflammable stays in the blood, and affects the brain. Great drinkers commonly die apoplectick. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

To DRIP. v. n. [drippen, Dut.]

1. To fall in drops.

2. To have drops falling from it.

The soil, with fatt'ning moisture fill'd,
Is cloath'd with grass, and fruitful to be till'd;
Such as in fruitful vales we view from high,
Which dripping rocks, not rowling streams, supply.
Dryden.

The finest sparks, and cleanest beaux,
Drip from the shoulders to the toes. Prior.

To DRIP. v. a.

1. To let fall in drops.

Her flood of tears
Seem like the lofty barn of some rich swain,
Which from the thatch drips fast a show'r of rain.
Swift.

The Romans did not think that tyranny was thoroughly extinguished, till they had driven one of their consuls to depart the city, against whom they found not in the world what to object, saving only that his name was Tarquin. Hooker.

He was driven by the necessities of times, more than led by his own disposition, to rigour.
King Charles.

13. To distress; to straighten.

This kind of speech is in the manner of desperate men far driven. Spenser's State of Ireland.

14. To urge by violence, not kindness.

He taught the gospel rather than the law,
And forc'd himself to drive, but lov'd to draw.
Dryden.

15. To impel by influence of passion.

I drave my suitor from his mad humour of love to a living humour of madness. Shakesp. As you like it.

Discontents drave men into slidings. K. Charles.

Lord Cottington, being master of temper, and of the most profound dissimulation, knew too well how to lead him into a mistake, and then drive him into choler. Clarendon.

It is better to marry than to burn, says St. Paul; where we may see what drives men into a conjugal life: a little burning pushes us more powerfully than greater pleasures in prospect. Locke.

6. To urge; to press to a conclusion.

The experiment of wood that shineth in the dark, we have diligently driven and pursued; the rather for that, of all things that give light here below, it is the most durable, and hath least apparent motion. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

We have thus the proper notions of the four elements, and both them and their qualities driven up and resolved into their most simple principles.
Digby on Bodies.

To drive the argument farther, let us inquire into the obvious designs of this divine architect.
Cheyne's Philos. Principles.

The design of these orators was to drive some particular point, either the condemnation or acquittal. Swift.

17. To carry on; to keep in motion.

As a farmer cannot husband his ground so well, if he sit at a great rent; so the merchant cannot drive his trade so well, if he sit at great usury. Bacon.

The bees have common cities of their own,
And common sort; beneath one law they live,
And with one common stock their traffick drive.
Dryden.

Your Pasimond a lawless bargain drove,
The parent could not sell the daughter's love. Dryd.

The trade of life cannot be driven without partners. Collier.

To DRIVE. v. n.

1. To go as impelled by any external agent.

The needle endeavours to conform unto the meridian; but, being distracted, driveth that way where the greater and powerfuller part of the earth is placed. Brown's Vulg. Err.

Love, fixt to one, still safe at anchor rides,
And dares the fury of the winds and tides;
But losing once that hold, to the wide ocean born,
It drives away at will, to every wave a scorn. Dryd.

Not with the rising storm would vainly strive;
But left the helm, and let the vessel drive.
Dryden's Æneid.

2. To rush with violence.

Fierce Boreas drove against his flying sails,
And rent the sheets. Dryden's Æneid.

Near as he draws, thick harbingers of smoke
With gloomy pillars cover all the place;
Whose little intervals of night are broke
By sparks that drive against his sacred face. Dryd.

Then with so swift an ebb the flood drove backward,
It slipt from underneath the scaly herd.
Dryden's All for Love.

The bees drive out upon each other's backs,
T' imboss their hives in clusters. Dryd. Don Sebast.

While thus he stood,
Perithous' dart drove on, and nail'd him to the wood. Dryden.

As a ship, which winds and waves assail,
Now with the current drives, now with the gale;
She feels a double force, by turns obeys
Th' imperious tempest, and th' impetuous seas.
Dryden.

The wolves scampered away, however, as hard as they could drive. L. Estrange.

Thick as autumnal leaves, or driving sand,
The moving squadrons blacken all the strand.
Pope's Iliad.

3. To pass in a carriage.

There is a litter ready; lay him in 't,
And drive tow'rd Dover. Shakesp. King. Lear.

Thy flaming chariot-wheels, that shook
Heav'n's everlasting frame, while o'er the necks
Thou drov'st of warring angels disarray'd. Milton.

4. To tend to; to consider as the scope and ultimate design.

Authors drive at these, as the highest elegancies, which are but the frigidities of wit.
Brown's Vulg. Errours.

We cannot widely mistake his discourse, when we have found out the point he drives at. Locke.

They look no further before them than the next line; whence it will inevitably follow, that they can drive to no certain point, but ramble from one subject to another. Dryden.

We have done our work, and are come within view of the end that we have been driving at.
Addison on the War.

5. To aim; to strike at with fury.

DRO'WSINESS. n. s. [from drowsy.]

1. Sleepiness; heaviness with sleep; disposition to sleep.

What a strange drowsiness possesses them! Shakesp.

In deep of night, when drowsiness
Hath lock'd up mortal sense, then listen I
To the celestial syren's harmony. Milton.

What succour can I hope the muse will send,
Whose drowsiness hath wrong'd the muse's friend? Crashaw.

He passes his whole life in a dozed condition, between sleeping and waking, with a kind of drowsiness and confusion upon his senses. South.

He that from his childhood has made rising betimes familiar to him, will not waste the best part of his life in drowsiness and lying a-bed. Locke.

A sensation of drowsiness, oppression, and lassitude, are signs of a plentiful meal in young people. Arbuthnot.

2. Idleness; indolence; inactivity.

It falleth out well, to shake off your drowsiness; for it seemed to be the trumpet of a war. Bacon's Holy War.

DRO'WSIHED. n. s. Sleepiness; inclination to sleep. Obsolete.

The royal virgin shook off drowsihed;
And rising forth out of her baser boure,
Look'd for her knight. Fairy Queen.

DRO'WSY. adj. [from drowse.]

1. Sleepy; heavy with sleep; lethargick.

Drowsy am I, and yet can rarely sleep. Sidney.

Men are drowsy, and desirous to sleep, before the fit of an ague, and do use to yawn and stretch. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

The flowers, call'd out of their beds,
Start and raise up their drowsy heads. Cleaveland.

Drunken at last, and drowsy, they depart
Each to his house. Dryden.

2. Heavy; lulling; causing sleep.

Sir Guyon, mindful of his vows yplight,
Uprose from drowsy couch. Fairy Queen.

While thus she rested, on her arm reclin'd,
The hoary willows waving with the wind,
And feather'd quires that warbled in the shade,
And purling streams that through the meadow stray'd,
In drowsy murmurs lull'd the gentle maid. Addison.

3. Stupid; dull.

Those inadvertencies, a body would think, even our author, with all his drowsy reasoning, could never have been capable of. Atterbury.

To DRUB. v. a. [druber to kill, Dan.] To thresh; to beat; to bang: to thump; to thwack; to cudgel. A word of contempt.

He that is valiant, and dares fight,
Though drubb'd, can lose no honour by't. Hudibras.

The little thief had been soundly drubbed with a good honest cudgel. L'Estrange.

Though the bread be not mine, yet, if it had been less than weight, I should have been drubbed. Locke.

DRUB. n. s. [from the verb.] A thump; a knock; a blow.

The blows and drubs I have receiv'd
Have bruis'd my body, and bereav'd
My limbs of strength. Hudibras.

By setting an unfortunate mark on their followers, they have exposed them to innumerable drubs and contusions. Addison.

To DRUDGE. v. n. [bpeccan to vex, Sax. draghen, to carry, Dut.] To labour in mean offices; to toil without honour or dignity; to work hard; to slave.

And to crack'd fiddle, and hoarse tabour,
In merriment, did drudge and labour. Hudibras.

The poor sleep little: we must learn to watch
Our labours late, and early every morning,
Midst winter frosts; then, clad and fed with sparing,
Rise to our toils, and drudge away the day. Otway.

Advantages obtained by industry, directed by philosophy, can never be expected from drudging ignorance. Glanville.

Soon he came to court,
Proffering for hire his service at the gate,
To drudge, draw water, and to run or wait. Dryd.

I made no such bargain with you, to live always drudging. Dryden's Dedication, Æneid.

What is an age, in dull renown drudg'd o'er!
One little single hour of love is more. Granville.

DRUDGE. n. s. [from the verb.] One employed in mean labour; a slave; one doomed to servile occupation.

To conclude, this drudge of the devil, this diviner, laid claim to me. Shakesp. Comedy of Err.

He sits above and laughs the while
At thee, ordain'd his drudge, to execute
Whate'er his wrath shall bid. Milton's Par. Lost.

Art thou our slave,
Our captive, at the publick mill our drudge,
And dar'st thou, at our sending and command,
Dispute thy coming? Milton's Agonistes.

He is content to be their drudge,
And on their errands gladly trudge. Hudibras.

The hard master makes men serve him for nought, who rewards his drudges and slaves with nothing but shame, and sorrow, and misery. Tillotson.

DRU'DGER. n. s. [from drudge.]

1. A mean labourer.
2. The drudging-box; the box out of which flower is thrown on roast meat. Dict.

DRU'DGERY. n. s. [from drudge.] Mean labour; ignoble toil; dishonourable work; servile occupation.

My old dame will be undone for one to do her husbandry and her drudgery. Shakesp.

Were there not instruments for drudgery as well as offices of drudgery? Were there not people to receive orders, as well as others to give and authorise them? L'Estrange.

You do not know the heavy grievances,
The toils, the labours, weary drudgeries,
Which they impose. Southern's Oroonoko.

To thee that drudgery of pow'r I give;
Cares be thy lot: reign though, and let me live. Dryden.

Paradise was a place of bliss, as well as immortality, without drudgery, and without sorrow. Locke.

Even Drudgery himself,
As at the car he sweats, or dusty hews
The palace stone, looks gay. Thomson's Summer.

It is now handled by every dirty wench, and condemned to do her drudgery. Swift's Meditations on a Broomstick.

DRU'DGINGBOX. n. s. [drudging and box.] The box out of which flour is sprinkled upon roast meat.

Not by the drudgingbox to be recall'd. King's Cookery.

DRU'DGINGLY. adv. [from drudging.] Laboriously; toilsomely.

He does now all the meanest and triflingest things himself drudgingly, without making use of any inferiour or subordinate minister. Ray on the Creation.

DRUG. n. s. [drogue, Fr.]

1. An ingredient used in physick; a medicinal simple.

A fleet descried
Hangs in the clouds, by equinoctial winds
Close sailing from Bengal, or the isles
Of Ternate and Tidore, whence merchants bring Their spicy drugs. Milton's Par. Lost

Judicious physick's noble art to gain,
He drugs and plants explor'd, alas! in vain. Smith.

Bright Helen mix'd a mirth-inspiring bowl,
Temper'd with drugs of sov'reign use, t' assuage
The boiling bosom of tumultuous rage. Pope's Odyssey.

In the names of drugs and plants, the mistake in a word may endanger life. Baker's Reflections on Learning.

2. It is used sometimes for poison.

Mortal drugs I have; but Mantua's law
Is death to any he that utters them. Shakesp.

And yet no doubts the poor man's draught controll;
He dreads no poison in his homely bowl:
Then fear the deadly drug, when gems divine
Enchase the cup, and sparkle in the wine. Dryd.

3. Any thing without worth or value; any thing of which no purchaser can be found.

Each noble vice
Shall bear a price,
And virtue shall a drug become.
An empty name,
Was all her fame,
But now she shall be dumb. Dryden's Albion.

4. A drudge. This seems the meaning here.

He from his first swath proceeded
Thro' sweet degrees that this brief world affords,
To such as may the passive drugs of it
Freely command. Shakesp.

To DRUG. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To season with ingredients, commonly medicinal.

The surfeited grooms
Do mock their charge with snores.—I've drugg'd their possets,
That death and nature do contend about them. Shakesp.

2. To tincture with something offensive.

Oft they assay'd,
Hunger and thirst constraining; drugg'd as oft
With hatefulest disrelish, writh'd their jaws
With soot and cinders fill'd. Milton's Par. Lost.

DRU'GGET. n. s. A slight kind of woollen stuff.

In druggets drest, of thirteen pence a-yard,
See Philip's son amidst his Persian guard. Swift.

DRU'GGIST. n. s. [from drug.] One who sells physical drugs.

Common nitre we bought at the druggist's. Boyle.

DRU'GSTER. n. s. [from drug.] One who sells physical simples.

They set the clergy below their apothecaries, the physician of the soul below the drugsters of the body. Atterbury.

DRUM. n. s. [tromme, Dan. drumme, Erse.]

1. An instrument of military musick, consisting of vellum strained over a broad hoop on each side, and beaten with sticks.

Let's march without the noise of threatening drums. Shakesp.

In drums, the closeness round about, that preserveth the sound from dispersing, maketh the noise come forth at the drum-hole far more loud and strong than if you should strike upon the like skin extended in the open air. Bacon.

Tears trickling down their breasts bedew the ground,
And drums and trumpets mix their mournful sound. Dryden.

Now no more the drum
Provokes to arms, or trumpet's clangor shrill
Affrights the wives, and chills the virgin's blood. Philips.

DRY. adj. [ðpiȝ, Sax.]

1. Arid; not wet; not moist.

If the pipe be a little wet on the inside, it will make a differing sound from the same pipe dry. Bacon.

When God said,
Be gather'd now, ye waters under heav'n,
Into one place, and let dry land appear! Milton.

Of turbid elements the sport;
From clear to cloudy tost, from hot to cold,
And dry to moist. Thomson.

2. Not rainy.

A dry March and a dry May portend a wholesome summer, if there be a showering April between. Bacon.

The weather, we agreed, was too dry for the season. Addison.

3. Not succulent; not juicy.

I will drain him dry as hay;
Sleep shall neither night nor day
Hang upon his penthouse lid:
He shall live a man forbid. Shakesp. Macbeth.

4. Being without tears.

Dry mourning will decays more deadly bring,
As a north wind burns a too forward spring:
Give sorrow vent, and let the sluices go. Dryden.

5. Thirsty; a-thirst.

So dry he was for sway. Shakesp. Tempest.

Void of a bulky charger near their lips,
With which, in often interrupted sleep,
Their frying blood compels to irrigate
Their dry furr'd tongues. Philips.

6. Jejune; barren; plain; unembellished; without pathos; without flowers.

As we should take care that our stile in writing be neither dry nor empty, we should look again it be not winding or wanton with far-fetched descriptions; either is a vice. Ben. Jonson.

It remaineth to treat concerning ornament within or without the fabrick; a piece not so dry as the meer contemplation of proportions: and therefore I hope therein somewhat to refresh both the reader and myself. Wotton's Architecture.

That the fire burns by heat, is an empty dry return to the question, and leaves us still ignorant. Glanville.

It is a dry fable, with little or nothing in it. L'Estrange.

Authority and friendship work upon some, dry and sober reason works upon others. L'Estrange.

To clear up this theory, I was willing to lay aside dry subtilties with which the schools are filled. Burnet's Theory.

These epistles will become less dry, and more susceptible of ornament. Pope.

7. Hard; severe. [Drien anciently to endure; dree, Scottish.]

Of two noblemen, the one was given to scoff, but kept ever royal cheer in his house, the other would ask of those that had been at his table, was there never a flout or dry blow given? Bacon.

I rather hop'd I should no more
Hear from you o' th' gallanting score;
For hard dry bastings us'd to prove
The readiest remedies of love;
Next a dry diet. Hudibras.

To DRY. v. a.

1. To free from moisture; to arefy; to exsiccate.

The meat was well, if you were so contented.
—I tell thee, Kate, 'twas burnt and dried away. Shakesp.

Heat drieth bodies that do easily expire, as parchment, leaves, roots, and clay; and so doth time arefy. Bacon.

Herbs and flowers, if they be dried in the shade, or dried in the hot sun a small time, keep best. Bacon.

The running streams are deep:
See, they have caught the father of the flock,
Who dries his fleece upon the neighbouring rock. Dryden.

2. To exhale moisture.

'Twas grief no more, or grief and rage were one
Within her soul: at last 'twas rage alone;
Which, burning upwards in succession, dries
The tears that stood considering in her eyes. Dryd.

3. To wipe away moisture.

Then with her vest the wound she wipes and dries. Denham.

See, at your blest returning,
Rage disappears;
The widow'd isle in mourning
Dries up her tears. Dryden's Albion.

Dry'ly. adv. [from dry.]

1. Without moisture.
2. Coldly; frigidly; without affection.

The archduke, conscious to himself how dryly the king had been used by his council, did strive to recover the king's affection. Bacon's Hen. VII.

Wouldst thou to honour and preferments climb,
Be bold in mischief, dare some mighty crime,
Which dungeons, death, or banishment deserves;
For virtue is but dryly prais'd, and starves.
Dryden's Juvenal.

3. Jejunely; barrenly; without ornament or embellishment.

Some dryly plain, without invention's aid,
Write dull receipts how poems may be made. Pope.

Dry'ness. n. s. [from dry.]

1. Want of moisture; siccity.

The Africans are conceived to be peculiarly scorched and torrified by the sun, by dryness of the soil, from want and defect of water. Brown's Vulg. Err.

Such was the discord which did first disperse
Form, order, beauty, through the universe;
While dryness moisture, coldness heat resists,
All that we have, and that we are, subsists. Denham.

The marrow supplies an oil for the inunction of the bones and ligaments in the articulations, and particularly of the ligaments, preserving them from dryness and rigidity, and keeps them supple and flexible. Ray on the Creation.

Is the sea ever likely to be evaporated by the sun, or to be emptied with buckets? Why then must we fancy this impossible dryness, and then, upon that fictitious account, calumniate nature? Bentley.

2. Want of succulence.

If he fill'd
His vacancy with his voluptuousness,
Full surfeits, and the dryness of his bones,
Call on him for't. Shakesp. Antony and Cleop.

The difference of muscular flesh depends upon the hardness, tenderness, moisture, or dryness of the fibres. Arbuthnot.

3. Want of embellishment; want of pathos; jejuneness; barrenness.

Their new flowers and sweetness do as much corrupt as others dryness and squalor, if they chuse not carefully. Ben Jonson.

Be faithful where the author excels, and paraphrase where penury of fancy or dryness of expression ask it. Garth.

4. Want of sensibility in devotion; want of ardour; aridity.

It may be, that by this dryness of spirit, God intends to make us the more fervent and resigned in our direct and solemn devotions, by the perceiving of our weakness. Taylor.

Dry'nurse. n. s. [dry and nurse.]

1. A woman who brings up and feeds a child without the breast.
2. One who takes care of another; with some contempt of the person taken care of.

Mrs. Quickly is his nurse, or his drynurse, or his cook, or his laundry, his washer, and his wringer. Shakesp.

To Dry'nurse. v. a. [from the noun.] To feed without the breast.

As Romulus a wolf did rear,
So he was drynurs'd by a bear. Hudibras.

Dry'shod. adj. [dry and shod.] Without wet feet; without treading above the shoes in the water.

He had embarked us in such disadvantage, as we could not return dryshod. Sidney.

Dryshod to pass, she parts the floods in tway;
And eke huge mountains from their native seat
She would command themselves to bear away.
Fairy Queen.

Has honour's fountain then suck'd back the stream?
He has: and hooting boys may dryshod pass,
And gather pebbles from the naked ford. Dryden.

Du'al. adj. [dualis, Lat.] Expressing the number two.

Modern languages have only one variation, and so the Latin; but the Greek and Hebrew have one to signify two, and another to signify more than two; under one variation the noun is said to be of the dual number, and under the other of the plural. Clarke's Latin Grammar.

To Dub. v. a. [ɒubban zo ɲubene, Sax. addubba till riddara, Islandick, to dub a knight. Addubba, in its primary sense, signifies to strike, knights being made by a blow with the sword.]

1. To make a man a knight.

Knight, knight, good mother! Basilisco like.
What! I am dubb'd; I have it on my shoulder. Shakesp.

The robes which the kings then allowed to each knight, when he was dubbed, of green, or burnet, as they spake in that age, appeareth upon record. Camden's Remains.

The king stood up under his cloth of state, took the sword from the lord protector, and dubbed the lord mayor of London knight. Hayward on Ed. VI.

2. To confer any kind of dignity, or new character.

The jealous o'erworn widow and herself,
Since that our brother dubb'd them gentlewomen,
Are mighty gossips in this monarchy. Sh. Ric. III.

He
Gave thee no instance why thou shouldst do treason,
Unless to dub thee with the name of traitor. Shak.

Women commence by Cupid's dart,
As a king hunting dubs a hart. Cleaveland.

A plain gentleman, of an ancient family, is of better quality than a new knight, though the reason of his dubbing was meritorious. Collier on Pride.

O poet! thou hadst been discreeter,
Hanging the monarch's hat so high,
If thou hadst dubb'd thy star a meteor,
That did but blaze, and rove, and die. Prior.

These demoniacks let me dub
With the name of legion club. Swift.

A man of wealth is dubb'd a man of worth;
Venus shall give him form, and Anstis birth. Pope.

Dub. n. s. [from the verb.] A blow; a knock.

As skilful coopers hoop their tubs
With Lydian and with Phrygian dubs. Hudibras.

Dubio'sity. n. s. [from dubious.] A thing doubtful. A word not used.

Men often swallow falsities for truths, dubiosities for certainties, feasibilities for possibilities, and things impossible for possible. Brown's Vulg. Err.

Du'bious. adj. [dubius, Lat.]

1. Doubting; not settled in an opinion.
2. Uncertain; that of which the truth is not fully known.

No quick reply to dubious questions make. Den.

Du'biousness. n. s. [from dubious.] Uncertainty; doubtfulness.

She speaks with dubiousness, not with the certainty of a goddess. Broome.

Du'bitable. adj. [from dubito, Lat.] Doubtful; uncertain; what may be doubted.

Dubita'tion. n. s. [dubitatio, Lat.] The act of doubting; doubt.

Many of the ancients denied the antipodes; but the experience of our enlarged navigation can now assert them beyond all dubitation. Brown's Vulg. Err.

Dubitation may be called a negative perception; that is, when I perceive that what I see is not what I would see. Grew.

Ducal. adj. [from duke.] Pertaining to a duke: as, a ducal coronet.

Du'cat. n. s. [from duke.] A coin struck by dukes: in silver, valued at about four shillings and six-pence; in gold, at nine shillings and six-pence.

I cannot instantly raise up the gross
Of full three thousand ducats. Shakesp.

There was one that died in debt: it was reported where his creditors were, that he was dead: one said, he hath carried five hundred ducats of mine into the other world. Bacon.

Duck. n. s. [anas; ducken, to dip, Dut.]

1. A water-fowl, both wild and tame.

The ducks, that heard the proclamation cried,
And fear'd a prosecution might betide,
Full twenty mile from town their voyage take,
Obscure in rushes of the liquid lake. Dryden.

Grubs, if you find your land subject to, turn ducks into it. Mortimer's Husbandry

2. A word of endearment, or fondness.

Will you buy any tape or lace for your cap,
My dainty duck, my dear-a? Shak Winter's Tale.

3. A declination of the head; so called from the frequent action of a duck in the water.

Back, shepherds, back; enough your play
Till next sunshine holyday;
Here be without duck or nod,
Other trippings to be trod,
Of lighter toes, and such court guise
As mercury did first devise. Milton.

4. A stone thrown obliquely on the water, so as to strike it and rebound.

Neither cross and pile, nor ducks and drakes, are quite so ancient as handy-dandy. Arbuthnot and Pope.

To Duck. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To dive under water as a duck.

The varlet saw, when to the flood he came,
How without stop or stay he fiercely leapt;
And deep himself he ducked in the same,
That in the lake his lofty crest was steept. Fairy Queen.

Let the labouring bark climb hills of seas
Olympus high, and duck again as low
As hell 's from heaven. Shakesp. Othello

Thou art wickedly devout;
In Tiber ducking thrice by break of day. Dryden

2. To drop down the head, as a duck.

As some raw youth in country bred,
When at a skirmish first he hears
The bullets whistling round his ears,
Will duck his head aside, will start,
And feel a trembling at his heart. Swift.

3. To bow low; to cringe. In Scottish duyk, or juyk, to make obeisance, is still used.

I cannot flatter and look fair,
Smile in men's faces, smooth, deceive, and cog,
Duck with French nods, and apish courtesy. Shak.

The learned pate
Ducks to the golden fool. Shakesp. Timon.

To DUCK. v. a. To put under water.

DUCT. n. s. [ductus, Lat.]

1. Guidance; direction.

This doctrine, by fastening all our actions by a fatal decree at the foot of God's chair, leaves nothing to us but only to obey our fate, to follow the duct of the stars, or necessity of those irony chains which we are born under. Hammond.

2. A passage through which any thing is conducted: a term chiefly used by anatomists.

A duct from each of those cells ran into the root of the tongue, where both joined together, and passed forward in one common duct to the tip of it. Addison's Spectator.

It was observed that the chyle, in the thoracic duct, retained the original taste of the aliment. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

DU'CTILE. adj. [ductilis, Lat.]

1. Flexible; pliable.

Thick woods and gloomy night
Conceal the happy plant from human sight:
One bough it bears; but wond'rous to behold!
The ductile rind and leaves of radiant gold.
Dryden's Æneid.

2. Easy to be drawn out into length, or expanded.

All bodies ductile and tensile, as metals, that will be drawn into wires; wool and tow, that will be drawn into yarn or thread; have the appetite of not discontinuing strong. Bacon.

Gold, as it is the purest, so it is the softest and most ductile, of all metals. Dryden.

3. Tractable; obsequious; complying; yielding.

He generous thoughts instills
Of true nobility; forms their ductile minds
To human virtues. Philips.

Civil dudgeon first grew high,
And men fell out they knew not why. Hudibras.

The cuckoo took this a little in dudgeon. L'Estr.

DUE. adj. The participle passive of owe. [dû, Fr.]

1. Owed; that which any one has a right to demand in consequence of a compact, or for any other reason.

There is due from the judge to the advocate some commendation and gracing, where causes are well handled and fair pleaded. There is likewise due to the public a civil reprehension of advocates, where there appeareth cunning, gross neglect, or slight information. Bacon.

Mirth and cheerfulness are but the due reward of innocency of life. More's Divine Dialogues.

A present blessing upon our fasts is neither originally due from God's justice, nor becomes due to us from his veracity. Smalridge's Sermons.

There is a respect due to mankind, which should incline ever the wisest of men to follow innocent customs. Watts.

2. Proper; fit; appropriate.

Opportunity may be taken to excite, in persons attending on those solemnities, a due sense of the vanity of earthly satisfactions. Atterbury.

3. Exact; without deviation.

You might see him come towards me beating the ground in so due time, as no dancer can observe better measure. Sidney.

And Eve within, due at her hour prepar'd
For dinner savoury fruits. Milton.

4. Consequent to; occasioned or affected by. Proper, but not usual.

The motion of the oily drops may be in part due to some partial solution made by the vinous spirit, which may tumble them to and fro. Boyle.

DUE. adv. [from the adjective.] Exactly; directly; duly. The course is due east, or due west.

Like the Pontick sea,
Whose icy current, and compulsive course,
Ne'er feels retiring ebb, but keeps due on
To the Propontick and the Hellespont. Shak. Oth.

DUE. n. s. [from the adjective.]

1. That which belongs to one; that which may be justly claimed.

My due from thee is this imperial throne,
Which, as immediate from thy place and blood,
Derives itself to me. Shakesp.

The son of Duncan,
From whom this tyrant holds the due of birth,
Lives in the English court. Shakesp. Macbeth.

Thou best know'st
Effects of courtesy, dues of gratitude;
Thy half o' th' kingdom thou hast not forgot,
Wherein I thee endow'd. Shakesp. King Lear.

The due of honour in no point omit. Shakesp. Cymb.

I take this garland, not as given by you,
But as my merit and my beauty's due. Dryden.

No popular assembly ever knew, or presumed, or declared, what share of power was their due. Milton's Ref.

2. Right; just title.

The key of this infernal pit by due,
And by command of heaven's all-powerful King,
I keep. Milton's Par. Lost.

3. Whatever custom or law requires to be done.

Befriend
Us, thy vow'd priests, till utmost end
Of all thy dues be done, and none left out. Milton.

They pay the dead his annual dues. Dryden.

4. Custom; tribute; exactions; legal or customary perquisites.

In respect of the exorbitant dues that are paid at most other ports, this deservedly retains the name of free. Addison.

To DUE. v. a. [from the noun.] To pay as due; perhaps for endow. It is perhaps only in this single passage.

This is the latest glory of their praise,
That I thy enemy due thee withal. Shakesp.

DU'EL. n. s. [duellum, Lat.] A combat between two; a single fight.

In many armies, if the matter should be tried by duel between two champions, the victory should go on the one side; and yet, if it be tried by the gross, go on the other side. Bacon.

Dream not of your fight
As of a duel, or the local wounds
Of head or heel. Milton's Par. Lost.

'Twas I that wrong'd you; you my life have sought;
No duel ever was more justly fought. Waller.

To DU'EL. v. n. [from the noun.] To fight a single combat.

He must at length, poor man! die dully at home, when here he might so fashionably and genteelly have been duelled or fluxed into another world. South.

The challenging and fighting with a man is called duelling. Locke.

To DU'EL. v. a. To attack or fight with singly.

Who single
Duell'd their armies rank'd in proud array,
Himself an army, now unequal match
To save himself against a coward arm'd,
At one spear's length. Milton's Agonistes.

DU'ELLER. n. s. [from duel.] A single combatant.

They perhaps begin as single duellers, but then they soon get their troops about them. Dec. of Piety.

DU'ELLIST. n. s. [from duel.]

1. A single combatant.

If the king ends the differences, the case will fall out no worse than when two duellists enter the field, where the worsted party hath his sword again, without further hurt. Suckling.

Henceforth let poets, ere allow'd to write,
Be search'd like duellists before they fight. Dryd.

2. One who professes to study the rules of honour.

His bought arms Mung not lik'd; for his first day
Of bearing them in field, he threw 'em away;
And hath no honour lost, our duellists say. B. Jon.

DUE'LLO. n. s. [Ital.] The duel; the rule of duelling.

The gentleman will, for his honour's sake, have one bout with you: he cannot by the duello avoid it. Shakesp.

DUENNA. n. s. [Span.] An old woman kept to guard a younger.

I felt the ardour of my passion increase as the season advanced, till in the month of July I could not forbear courting: I bribed her duenna, was admitted to the bath, saw her undressed, and the wonder displayed. Arbuthnot and Pope.

DUG. n. s. [daegia, to give suck, Islandick.]

1. A pap; a nipple; a teat; spoken of beasts, or in malice or contempt of human beings.

Of her there bred
A thousand young ones, which she daily fed,
Sucking upon her poisonous dugs; each one
Of sundry shape, yet all ill-favoured. Fairy Q.

They are first fed and nourished with the milk of a strange dug. Raleigh's History.

Then shines the goat, whose brutish dugs supplied
The infant Jove, and nurst his growing pride. Creech.

2. It seems to have been used formerly of the breast, without reproach.

It was a faithless squire that was the source
Of all my sorrow, and of those sad tears;
With whom, from tender dug of common nourse,
At once I was up brought. Fairy Queen.

As mild and gentle as the cradle babe,
Dying with mother's dug between its lips. Shak.

DUG. preter. and part. pass. of dig.

What! mak'st thou me a dullard in this act?
Wilt thou not speak to me? Shakesp. Cymbeline

Thou must make a dullard of the world,
If they not thought the profits of my death
Were very pregnant and potential spurs
To make thee seek it. Shakesp. King Lear

DU'LLY. adv. [from dull.]

1. Stupidly; doltishly.

It is not sufficient to imitate nature in every circumstance dully, literally, and meanly; but it becomes a painter to take what is most beautiful. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

2. Slowly; sluggishly.

The air, if it be moist, doth in a degree quench the flame, and howsoever maketh it burn more dully. Bacon.

3. Not vigorously; not gaily; not brightly; not keenly.

Not that I think these gentlemen,
Who vary action with the times,
Are less ingenious in their art
Than those who duly act one part. Hudibras.

DU'LNESS. n. s. [from dull.]

1. Stupidity; weakness of intellect; indocility; slowness of apprehension.

Nor is the dulness of the scholar to extinguish, but rather to inflame, the charity of the teacher. South.

Shadwel alone my perfect image bears,
Mature in dulness from his tender years. Dryden.

Ever since they firmly have retained,
And duly well observed his beheast. Spenser.
My prayers
Are not words duly hallow'd, nor my wishes
More worth than vanities; yet prayers and wishes
Are all I can return. Shakesp. Hen. VIII.
In the body, when the principal parts, as the heart and liver, do their offices, and all the inferiour smaller vessels act orderly and duly, there arises a sweet enjoyment upon the whole, which we call health. South.
If attention be duly engaged to those reflections, they cannot fail of influence. Rogers.

2. Regularly; exactly.
Seldom at church, 'twas such a busy life;
But duly sent his family and wife. Pope.

DUMB. adj. [דום he was silent; dumbs, Gothick; ðumbe, Sax. dum, Danish; dom, Dut. dull.]

1. Mute; incapable of speech.
It hath pleased himself sometime to unloose the very tongues even of dumb creatures, and to teach them to plead in their own defence, lest the cruelty of man should persist to afflict them. Hooker.
They spake not a word;
But like dumb statues or unbreathing stones,
Star'd each on other. Shakesp. Rich. III.
Some positive terms signify a negative idea; blind implies a privation of sight, dumb a denial of speech. Watts's Logick.

2. Deprived of speech.
They sung no more, or only sung his fame;
Struck dumb, they all admir'd the godlike man. Dryden.

3. Mute; not using words.
He is a proper man's picture; but, alas! who can converse with a dumb show? Shakesp. Merchant of Venice.
His gentle dumb expression turn'd at length
The eye of Eve to mark his play. Milton.
Her humble gestures made the residue plain,
Dumb eloquence persuading more than speech. Roscommon.
For he who covets gain in such excess
Does by dumb signs himself as much express,
As if in words at length he show'd his mind. Dryden's Juvenal.
Nothing is more common than for lovers to complain, relent, languish, despair, and die in dumb show. Addison.

4. Silent; refusing to speak.
The good old seer withstood
Th' intended treason, and was dumb to blood;
Till tir'd with endless clamours, and pursuit
Of Ithacus, he stood no longer mute. Dryd. Æn.

They had like to have dumfounded the justice; but his clerk came in to his assistance. Spectator.

DUMP. n. s. [from dom stupid, Dut.]

1. Sorrow; melancholy; sadness.
Sing no more ditties, sing no more
Of the dumps so dull and heavy;
The feuds of men were ever so,
Since summer first was leafy. Sh. Much Ado.
Visit by night your lady's chamber window
With some sweet consort; to their instruments
Tune a deploring dump: the night's dead silence
Will well become such sweet complaining grievance. Shakesp.
Funerals with stately pomp
March slowly on in solemn dump. Hudibras.
The squire who fought on bloody stumps,
By future bards bewail'd in doleful dumps. Gay's Pastorals.

This shame dumps cause to well-bred people, when it carries them away from the company. Locke.

DU'MPISH. adj. [from dump.] Sad; melancholy; sorrowful.
New year, forth looking out of Janus' gate,
Doth seem to promise hope of new delight;
And bidding th' old adieu his passed date
Bids all old thoughts to die in dumpish spight. Spenser.
The life which I live at this age is not a dead, dumpish, and sour life; but cheerful, lively, and pleasant.

DU'MPLING. n. s. [from dump, heaviness.] A sort of pudding.
Pudding and dumpling burn to pot. Dryden.

DUN. adj. [ðun, Sax.]

1. A colour partaking of brown and black.
We are not to expect a strong and full white, such as is that of paper; but some dusky obscure one, such as might arise from a mixture of light and darkness, or from white and black, that is, a grey, or dun, or russet brown. Newton's Opticks.

2. Dark; gloomy.
Come, thick night!
And pall thee in the dunnest smoke of hell. Shak.
He then survey'd
Hell and the gulph between, and Satan there
Coasting the wall of heaven on this side,
In the dun air sublime. Milton's Par. Lost.

To DUN. v. a. [ðunan, Sax. to clamour.] To claim a debt with vehemence and importunity.
Borrow of thy back, and borrow of thy belly: they'll never ask thee again. I shall be dunning thee every day. Bacon.
When thou dunn'st their parents, seldom they,
Without a suit before the tribune pay. Dryd. Juv.
I remember what she won:
And hath she sent so soon to dun? Swift.

DUN. n. s. [from the verb.] A clamorous, importunate, troublesome creditor.
Thus, while my joyless minutes tedious flow,
With looks demure, and silent pace, a dun,
Horrible monster! hated by gods and men,
To my aerial citadel ascends. Philips.
It grieves my heart to be pulled by the sleeve by some rascally dun—Sir, remember my bill. Arbuthnot's John Bull.

DUNCE. n. s. [A word of uncertain etymology; perhaps from dum, Dutch, stupid.] A dullard; a dolt; a thick-scull; a stupid, indocile animal.
Dunce at the best, in streets but scarce allow'd
To tickle, on thy straw, the stupid crowd. Dryd.
Was Epiphanius so great a dunce to imagine a thing, indifferent in itself, should be directly opposite to the law of God? Stillingfleet.
I never knew this town without dunces of figure, who had credit enough to give rise to some new word. Swift.

DUNG. n. s. [ðmez, Sax.] The excrement of animals used to fatten ground.
For dung, all excrements are the refuse and putrefactions of nourishment. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
I judge the likeliest way to be the perforation of the body of the tree in several places, one above the other; and the filling of the holes with dung, mingled with the medicine; and the watering of those lumps of dung with squirts of an infusion of the medicine in dunged water, once in three or four days. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
For when from herbs the pure part must be won,
From grass by 'stilling, this is better done
By despis'd dung than by the fire or sun. Donne.
He soon would learn to think like me,
And bless his ravish'd eyes to see
Such order from confusion sprung,
Such gaudy tulips rais'd from dung. Swift.

To DUNG. v. a. [from the noun.] To manure with dung.
It was received of old, that dunging of grounds when the west wind bloweth, and in the decease of the moon, doth greatly help. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
There as his dream foretold, a cart he found,
That carried compost forth to dung the ground. Dryden.

DU'NGEON. n. s. [from donjon, the tower in which prisoners were kept, whence all prisons eminently strong were in time called dungeons.] A close prison: generally spoke of a prison dark or subterraneous.
Then up he took the slumbered senseless corse,
And, ere he could out of his swoon awake,
Him to his castle brought with hasty force,
And in a dungeon deep him threw without remorse. Spenser.
We know not that the king of heav'n hath doom'd
This place our dungeon; not our safe retreat
Beyond his potent arm. Milton's Par. Lost.
Now from the north
Of Norumbeque, and the Samoed shore,
Bursting their brazen dungeon, arm'd with ice,
And snow, and hail, come stormy gust and flaw. Milton.
By imagination, a man in a dungeon is capable of entertaining himself with scenes and landscapes, more beautiful than any that can be found in the whole compass of nature. Addison.

DU'NGFORK. n. s. [dung and fork.] A fork to toss out dung from stables.
Dungforks and paddles are common every where. Mortimer.

DU'NGHIL. n. s. [dung and hill.]

1. An heap or accumulation of dung.
I, his brother, gain nothing under him but growth; for the which his animals on his dunghils are as much bound to him as I. Shakesp. As you like it.
Two cocks fought a duel for the mastery of a dunghil. L'Estrange.
Never enter into a league of friendship with an ingrateful person; that is, plant not thy friendship upon a dunghil: it is too noble a plant for so base a soil. South.
The dunghil having raised a huge muhsroom of short duration, is now spread to enrich other men's land. Swift.

2. Any mean or vile abode.
Perhaps a thousand other worlds, that lie
Remote from us, and latent in the sky,
Are lighten'd by his beams, and kindly nurst,
Of which our earthly dunghil is the worst. Dryd.

3. Any situation of meanness.
The poor he raiseth from the dust,
Ev'n from the dunghil lifts the just. Sandys.

4. A term of reproach for a man meanly born.
Out, dunghil! dar'st thou brave a nobleman? Shakesp.

DU'NGHIL. adj. Sprung from the dunghil: mean; low; base; vile; worthless.
His dunghil thoughts, which do themselves enure
To dirty dross, no higher dare aspire. Spen. on Love.

DU'NGY. adj. [from dung.] Full of dung; mean; vile; base; low; odious; worthless.

We need no grave to bury honesty;
There 's not a grain of it, the face to sweeten
Of the whole dungy earth. Shak. Winter's Tale.

DU'NGYARD. n. s. [dung and yard.] The place of the dunghil.

Any manner of vegetables cast into the dung-yard. Mortimer.

DU'NNER. n. s. [from dun.] One employed in soliciting petty debts.

Grisepsius, a learned Polander, endeavours to establish the duodecuple proportion among the Jews by comparing some passages of scripture together. Arbuthnot on Coins.

DUPE. n. s. [dupe, Fr. from duppe, a foolish bird, easily caught.] A credulous man; a man easily tricked. A modern word hardly established.

An usurping popedoe is its own dupe, a mere underworker, and a purchaser in trust for some single tyrant. Swift.

First slave to words, then vassal to a name,
Then dupe to party; child and man the same. Dunc.

To DUPE. v. a. [from the noun.] To trick; to cheat.

The throne a bigot keep, a genius quit;
Faithless through piety, and dup'd through wit. Pope.

DU'PLE. adj. [duplus, Lat.] Double; one repeated.

To DU'PLICATE. v. a. [duplico, Lat.]

1. To double; to enlarge by the repetition of the first number or quantity.

And some alterations in the brain duplicate that which is but a single object to our undistempered sentiments. Glanville.

2. To fold together.

DU'PLICATE. adj. [from the verb.]

Duplicate proportion is the proportion of squares. Thus, in a rank of geometrical proportions, the first term to the third is said to be in a duplicate ratio of the first to the second, or as its square is to the square of the second: so in 2, 4, 8, 16, the ratio of 2 to 8 is a duplicate of that of 2 to 4, or as the square of 2 to the square of 4. Phillips. Harris. Bailey.

It has been found, that the attraction is almost reciprocally in a duplicate proportion of the distance of the middle of the drop from the concourse of the glasses, viz. reciprocally in a simple proportion, by reason of the spreading of the drop, and its touching each glass in a larger surface; and again reciprocally in a simple proportion, by reason of the attractions growing stronger within the same quantity of attracting surface. Newton's Opt.

DU'PLICATE. n. s. Another correspondent to the first; a second thing of the same kind, as a transcript of a paper.

Nothing is more needful for perfecting the natural history of bodies, than the subjecting them to the fire; to which end I have reserved duplicates of the most considerable. Woodward.

DUPLICA'TION. n. s. [from duplicate.]

1. The act of doubling.

What great pains hath been taken concerning the quadrature of a circle, and the duplication of a cube, and some other mathematical problems. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

2. The act of folding together.

3. A fold; a doubling.

The peritonæum is a strong membrane, every where double; in the duplications of which all the viscera of the abdomen are hid. Wiseman's Surg.

DU'PLICATURE. n. s. [from duplicate.] A fold; any thing doubled.

The lymphæducts, either dilacerated or obstructed, exonerate themselves into the foldings, or between the duplicatures of the membranes. Ray on the Creation.

DUPLI'CITY. n. s. [duplicis, Lat.]

1. Doubleness; the number of two.

This duplicity was ill contrived to place one head at both extremes, and had been more tolerable to have set three or four at one. Brown's Vulg. Err.

Do not affect duplicities nor triplicities, nor any certain number of parts, in your division of things. Watts's Logick.

2. Deceit; doubleness of heart or of tongue.

DURABI'LITY. n. s. [durabilis, Lat.] The power of lasting; continuance; endurance.

Stones, though in dignity of nature inferior unto plants, yet exceed them in firmness of strength, or durability of being. Hooker.

Our times upon the earth have neither certainty nor durability. Raleigh's History.

DU'RABLE. adj. [durabilis, Lat.]

1. Lasting; having the quality of long continuance.

The bones of his body we may compare to the hard rocks and stones, and therefore strong and durable. Raleigh's History.

With pins of adamant,
And chains, they made all fast; too fast they made,
And durable! Milton's Par. Lost.

The glories of her majesty's reign ought to be recorded in words more durable than brass, and such as our posterity may read a thousand years hence. Swift.

2. Having successive existence.

Time, though in eternity, applied
To motion, measures all things durable
By present, past, and future. Milton.

DU'RABLENESS. n. s. [from durable.] Power of lasting; continuance.

The different consistence and durableness of the strata whereof they consist, are more or less. Woodw.

A bad poet, if he cannot become immortal by the goodness of his verse, may by the durableness of the metal that supports it. Add. on Anc. Med.

DU'RABLY. adv. [from durable.] In a lasting manner.

There indeed he found his fame flourishing, his monuments engraved in marble, and yet more durably in men's memories. Sidney.

DU'RANCE. n. s. [from duresse, law, Fr.]

1. Imprisonment; the custody or power of a jailor; a prison.

Thy Dol, and Helen of thy noble thoughts,
Is in base durance and contagious prison;
Haul'd thither by mechanick dirty hands. Shak.

A poor, innocent, forlorn stranger, languishing in durance, upon the false accusations of a lying, insolent, whorish woman. South.

There's neither iron bar nor gate,
Portcullis, chain, nor bolt, nor grate;
And yet men durance there abide,
In dungeons scarce three inches wide. Hudib.

Notwithstanding the warning and example before me, I commit myself to lasting durance. Congreve's Old Bachelor.

2. Endurance; continuance; duration. A doubtful word.

Sick nature at that instant trembled round,
And mother earth sigh'd as she felt the wound:
Of how short durance was this new made state!
How far more mighty than heav'n's love, hell's hate! Dryden.

DURA'TION. n. s. [duratio, Lat.]

1. A sort of distance or length, the idea whereof we get, not from the permanent parts of space, but from the fleeting and perpetually perishing parts of succession. Locke.

2. Power of continuance.

Duration is a circumstance so essential to happiness, that if we conceived it possible for the joys of heaven itself to pass from us in an instant, we should find ourselves not much concerned for the attainment of them. Rogers.

3. Length of continuance.

Aristotle, by greatness of action, does not only mean it should be great in its nature, but also in its duration; that it should have a due length in it. Addison's Spectator.

To DURE. v. n. [duro Lat.] To last; to continue; to endure.

The delights and pleasures of the world are most pleasing while they dure. Raleigh's History.

DU'REFUL. adj. [from endure and full.] Lasting; of long continuance; durable. Not in use.

The dureful oak, whose sap is not yet dried,
Is long ere it conceive the kindling fire;
But when it once doth burn, it doth divide
Great heat, and makes his flames to heav'n aspire. Spenser.

DU'RELESS. adj. [from dure.] Without continuance; fading; transitory; short. Not in use.

Yet were that aptitude natural, more inclinable to follow and embrace the false and dureless pleasures of this stage-play world, than to become the shadow of God. Raleigh's History.

DU'RESSE. n. s. [Fr. hardship; severity.]

1. Imprisonment; constraint; confinement.

2. [In law.] A plea used, by way of exception, by him who, being cast into prison at a man's suit, or otherwise by threats, beating, &c. hardly used, seals any bond to him during his restraint. This the law holds as invalid, and supposes to be constrained. Cowell.

DU'RING. prep. [This word is rather a participle from dure; as, during life, durante vita, life continuing; during my pleasure, my pleasure continuing the same.] For the time of the continuance of; while any thing lasts.

If during his childhood he be constantly and rigorously kept from drinking cold liquor whilst he is hot, forbearance grows into a habit. Locke.

DU'RITY. n. s. [dureté, Fr. durus, Lat.] Hardness; firmness.

Ancients did burn fragments of marble, which in time became marble again, at least of indissoluble durity, as appeareth in the standing theatres. Wotton's Architecture.

Irradiancy or sparkling, found in many gems, is not discoverable in this; for it cometh short of their compactness and durity. Brown's Vulg. Err.

DURST. The preterite of dare.

The Christians durst have no images of the Deity, because they would rather die than defile themselves with such an impiety. Stillingfleet.

DUSK. adj. [duyster, Dut.]

1. Tending to darkness. See DUSKY.

2. Tending to blackness; dark-coloured.

The hills, to their supply,
Vapour and exhalation, dusk and moist,
Sent up amain. Milton's Par. Lost.

DUSK. n. s. [from the adjective.]

1. Tendency to darkness; incipient obscurity.

I will walk with you in the dusk of the evening, with my cloak upon my back. Spectator.

2. Darkness of colour; tendency to blackness.

Some sprinkled freckles on his face were seen,
Whose dusk set off the whiteness of the skin. Dryd.

DU'SKISH. adj. [from dusk.]

1. Inclining to darkness; tending to obscurity.

From his infernal furnace forth he threw
Huge flames; that dimmed all the heaven's light,
Enroll'd in duskish smoke, and brimstone blue. Spenser.

2. Tending to blackness; dark-coloured.

Sight is not contented with sudden departments from one extreme to another; therefore rather a duskish tincture than an absolute black. Wotton's Architecture.

DU'SKISHLY. adv. [from duskish.] Cloudily; darkly.

The sawdust burned fast, till part of the candle consumed: the dust gathering about the snast, made the snast to burn duskily. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

DU'SKY. adj. [supposed dusk; dugster, Dut.]

1. Tending to darkness; obscure; not luminous.

Here lies the dusky torch of Mortimer,
Chok'd with ambition of the meaner sort. Shak.

There fierce winds o'er dusky valleys blow,
Whose every puff bears empty shades away. Dryd.

Through the plains of one continual day,
Six shining months pursue their even way;
And six succeeding urge their dusky flight,
Obscur'd with vapours and o'erwhelm'd in night. Prior.

2. Tending to blackness; dark-coloured; not clear; not bright.

They did plot
The means that dusky Dis my daughter got. Shak.

It is not green, but of a dusky brown colour. Bac.

When Jove in dusky clouds involves the skies,
And the faint crescent shoots by fits before their eyes. Dryden.

The surface is of a dusky yellow colour. Woodward.

By mixing such powders, we are not to expect a strong and full white, such as is that of paper; but some dusky obscure one, such as might arise from a mixture of light and darkness, or from white and black; that is, a grey, or dun, or russet brown. Newton's Opticks.

3. Gloomy; sad; intellectually clouded.

While he continues in life, this dusky scene of horrour, this melancholy prospect of final perdition, will frequently occur to his fancy. Bentley's Sermons.

Umbriel, a dusky, melancholy sprite,
As ever sullied the fair face of light,
Down to the central earth, his proper scene,
Repairs to search the gloomy cave of spleen. Pope.

DUST. n. s. [ᵭuſt, Sax. duúst, Erse.]

1. Earth or other matter reduced to small particles.

The dust
Should have ascended to the roof of heav'n,
Rais'd by your populous troops. Shakesp. Antony and Cleopatra.

Dust helpeth the fruitfulness of trees, insomuch as they cast dust upon them: that powdering, when a shower cometh, maketh a soiling to the tree, being earth and water finely laid on Bacon's Nat. Hist.

2. The grave; the state of dissolution.

The sceptre, learning, physick, must
All follow this, and come to dust. Shakesp. Cymb.

Thou
Out of the ground wast taken, know thy birth;
For dust thou art, and shalt to dust return. Milton.

3. A mean and dejected state.

God raised up the poor out of the dust, to set them among princes. 1 Sam. ii. 8.

To DUST. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To free from dust.

2. To sprinkle with dust.

DU'STMAN. n. s. [dust and man.] One whose employment is to carry away the dust.

The dustman's cart offends thy clothes and eyes,
When through the street a cloud of ashes flies. Gay.

DU'STY. adj. [from dust.]

1. Filled with dust; clouded with dust.

All our yesterdays have lighted fools
The way to dusty death. Shakesp.

Arms and the dusty fields I less admire,
And soften strangely in some new desire. Dryden.

2. Covered or scattered with dust.

Even Drudgery himself,
As at the car he sweats, or dusty hews
The palace stone, looks gay. Thomson's Summer.

DU'TCHESS. n. s. [duchesse, Fr.]

1. The lady of a duke.

The duke of Cornwal, and Regan his dutchess, will be here. Shakesp. King Lear.

The duke was to command the army, and the dutchess, by the favour she possessed, to be near her majesty. Swift.

The gen'rous god who wit and gold refines,
And ripens spirits as he ripens mines,
Kept dross for dutchesses, the world shall know it,
To you gave sense, good humour, and a poet. Pope.

2. A lady who has the sovereignty of a dukedom.

DU'TCHY. n. s. [duché, Fr.] A territory which gives title to a duke, or has a duke for its sovereign.

Different states border on it; the kingdom of France, the dutchy of Savoy, and the canton of Bern. Addison on Italy.

France might have swallowed up his whole dutchy. Swift.

DUTCHY-COURT. n. s. A court wherein all matters appertaining to the dutchy of Lancaster are decided by the decree of the chancellor of that court. Cowell.

DU'TEOUS. adj. [from duty.]

1. Obedient; obsequious; respectful to those who have natural or legal authority.

Great Aurengzebe did duteous care express,
And durst not push too far his great success. Dryden.

A female softness, with a manly mind;
A duteous daughter, and a sister kind;
In sickness patient, and in death resign'd. Dryd.

Who taught the bee with winds and rains to strive,
To bring her burden to the certain hive;
And through the liquid fields again to pass
Duteous, and hark'ning to the sounding brass? Prior.

2 Obsequious; obedient to good or bad purposes: with to.

I know thee well; a serviceable villain!
As duteous to the vices of thy mistress,
As badness would desire. Shakesp. King Lear.

Every beast, more duteous at her call,
Than at Circean call the herd disguis'd. Milton.

3. Enjoined by duty; enforced by the relation of one to another. This sense is not now used.

With mine own tongue deny my sacred right,
With mine own breath release all duteous ties. Shakesp.

DU'TIFUL. adj. [duty and full.]

Flew dutifully back again,
And made an humble chapter for the king. Swift.

DU'TIFULNESS. n. s. [from dutiful.]

1. Obedience; submission to just authority.

Piety, or dutifulness to parents, was a most popular virtue among the Romans. Dryden's Æneid.

2. Reverence; respect.

It has strange kind of civility, and an evil dutifulness in friends and relatives, to suffer him to perish without reproof or medicine, rather than to seem unmannerly to a great sinner. Taylor's Rule of Living Holy.

DU'TY. n. s. [from due.]

1. That to which a man is by any natural or legal obligation bound.

When ye shall have done all those things which are commanded you, say, We are unprofitable servants: we have done that which was our duty to do. Luke, xvii. 10.

The pain children feel from any necessity of nature, it is the duty of parents to relieve. Locke.

2. Acts or forbearances required by religion or morality. In this sense it has a plural.

Good my lord,
You have begot me, bred me, lov'd me: I
Return those duties back, as are right fit;
Obey you, love you, and most honour you. Shak.

All our duty is set down in our prayers, because in all our duty we beg the Divine assistance; and remember that you are bound to do all those duties, for the doing of which you have prayed for the Divine assistance. Taylor's Devotion.

3. Obedience or submission due to parents, governours, or superiours; loyalty; piety to parents.

Think'st thou that duty shall have dread to speak,
When pow'r to flatt'ry bows? To plainness honour
Is bound, when majesty to folly falls. Shakesp. King Lear.

God's party will appear small, and the king's not greater, it being not probable, that those should have sense of duty to him that had none to God. Decay of Piety.

4. Act of reverence or respect.

They both atone,
Did duty to their lady as became. Fairy Queen.

5. The business of a soldier on guard.

The regiment did duty there punctually. Clarendon.

6. The business of war; service.

The night came and severed them, all parties being tired with the duty of the day. Clarendon.

See how the madmen bleed! Behold the gains
With which their master, love, rewards their pains!
For seven long years, on duty ev'ry day,
Lo! their obedience, and their mohawk's pay! Dryden.

7. Tax; impost; custom; toll.

All the wines make their way through several duties and taxes, before they reach the port. Addison.

Such shekels as they now shew, were the old ones in which duty was to be paid by their law. Arbuthnot on Coins.

DWARF. n. s. [ᵹpeorg, Sax. dwerg, Dut.]

1. A man below the common size of men.

Get you gone, you dwarf!
You minimus, of hindering knot-grass made. Shak.
Such dwarfs were some kind of apes. Brown.
They, but now who seem'd
In bigness to surpass earth's giant sons,
Now less than smallest dwarfs, in narrow room
Throng numberless. Milton. Par. Lost.

2. Any animal or plant below the natural bulk.

In a delicate plantation of trees, all well grown, fair, and smooth, one dwarf was knotty and crooked, and the rest had it in derision. L'Estr.
Saw off the stock in a smooth place; and for dwarf trees, graft them within four fingers of the ground. Mortimer.

3. An attendant on a lady or knight in romances.

The champion stout,
Eftstoones dismounted from his courser fierce,
And to the dwarf awhile his needless spear he gave. Spenser.

4. It is used often by botanists in composition; as, dwarf-elder, dwarf-honeysuckle.

To DWARF. v. a. [from the noun.] To hinder from growing to the natural bulk; to lessen; to make little.

It is reported that a good strong canvas, spread over a tree grafted low, soon after it putteth forth, will dwarf it, and make it spread. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
The whole sex is in a manner dwarfed, and shrunk into a race of beauties, that seems almost another species. Addison.

DWA'RFISH. adj. [from dwarf.] Below the natural bulk; low; small; little; petty; despicable.

Their dwarfish pages were,
As cherubims, all gilt. Shak. Henry VIII.
And are you grown so high in his esteem,
Because I am so dwarfish and so low? Shakesp.
This unheard sauciness, and boyish troops,
The king doth smile at; and is well prepar'd
To whip this dwarfish war, these pigmy arms,
From out the circle of his territories.
Shakesp. King John.
A thicket close beside the grove there stood,
With briars and brambles choak'd, and dwarfish wood. Dryden.
We should have lost oaks and cedars, and the other tall and lofty sons of the forest, and have found nothing but dwarfish shrubs, and creeping moss, and despicable mushrooms. Bentley.

DWA'RFISHLY. adv. [from dwarfish.] Like a dwarf.

DWA'RFISHNESS. adv. [from dwarfish.] Minuteness of stature; littleness.

'Tis no wonder that science hath not outgrown the dwarfishness of its pristine stature, and that the intellectual world is such a microcosm.
Glanville's Scepsis.

To DWAULE. v. a. [ᵹpelian, Sax. to wander; dwaelen, Dut.] To be delirious; a provincial word mentioned by Junius.

1. To inhabit; to live in a place; to reside; to have an habitation.

If thy brother that dwelleth by thee be waxen poor, and be sold unto thee, thou shalt not compel him to serve as a bond-servant. Lev. xxv. 39.
He shall dwell alone, without the camp shall his habitation be. Lev. xiii. 46.
John Haywood and Sir Thomas More, in the parish wherein I was born, dwelt and had possessions. Peacham.
Why are you vex'd lady? Why do you frown?
Here dwell no frowns, no anger; from these gates
Sorrow flies far. Milton.

2. To live in any form of habitation.

Abraham sojourned in the land of promise as in a strange country, dwelling in tabernacles.
Heb. xi. 9.

3. To be in any state or condition.

'Tis safer to be that which we destroy,
Than by destruction dwell in doubtful joy. Shak.

4. To be suspended with attention; to hang upon with care or fondness.

He inquest passion all this while did dwell;
Moreover-ruling his quick eyes her face to view,
Than his half ears to hear what she did tell. Spen.
Th' attentive queen
Dwelt on his accents. Smith's Phæd. and Hippol.
Such was that face, on which Ladwelt with joy,
Ere Greece assembled stemm'd the tides to Troy.
Pope.

5. To continue long speaking.

He preach'd the joys of heav'n, and pains of hell,
And warn'd the sinner with becoming zeal;
But on eternal mercy lov'd to dwell.
Dryden's Good Parson.
We have dwelt pretty long on the considerations of space and duration. Locke.
Those who defend our negociators, dwell upon their zeal and patience. Swift.

To DWELL. v. a. To inhabit. Not used.

I saw and heard; for we sometimes
Who dwell this wild, constrain'd by want, come forth
To town or village nigh. Milton's Par. Regained.

DWE'LLER. n. s. [from dwell.] An inhabitant; one that lives in any place.

The houses being kept up, did of necessity enforce a dweller; and the proportion of land for occupation being kept up, did of necessity enforce that dweller not to be beggar or cottager, but a man of some substance. Bacon's Hen. VII.
Their cries soon waken all the dwellers near;
Now murmuring noises rise in every street. Dryd.

DWE'LLING. n. s. [from dwell.]

1. Habitation; place of residence; abode.

His dwelling is low in a valley green,
Under the foot of Rauran mossy hore. Fairy Q.

If he have several dwellings, let him sort them so, that what he wanteth in the one he may find in the other. Bacon.
God will deign
To visit oft the dwellings of just men,
Delighted. Milton's Par. Lost.
All dwellings else
Flood overwhelm'd, and them with all their pomp
Deep under water roll'd; sea cover'd sea,
Sea without shore! Milton's Par. Lost.
The living few, and frequent funerals, then
Proclaim'd thy wrath on this forsaken place;
And now those few, who are return'd again,
Thy searching judgments to their dwellings trace.
Dryden.
The force of fire ascended first on high,
And took its dwelling in the vaulted sky.
Dryden's Ovid.

2. State of life; mode of living.

My dwelling shall be with the beasts of the field.
Daniel.

DWE'LLINGHOUSE. n. s. [from dwell and house.] The house at which one lives

A person ought always to be cited at the place of his dwellinghouse, which he has in respect of his habitation and usual residence; and not at the house which he has in respect of his estate, or the place of his birth. Ayliffe's Parergon.

DWE'LLINGPLACE. n. s. [dwell and place.] The place of residence.

People do often change their dwelling-places, and some must die, whilst other some do grow up into strength. Spenser.

To DWI'NDLE. v. n. [ᵹpinan, Sax.]

1. To shrink; to lose bulk; to grow little.

Thy dwindled legs seem crawling to the grave
Dryden.
Proper names, when familiarized in English, dwindle to monosyllables, whereas in other languages they receive a softer turn, by the addition of a new syllable. Addison.
Our drooping days are dwindled down to nought,
Their period finish'd ere 'tis well begun. Thomson.

2. To degenerate; to sink.

'Tis now dwindled down to light frothy stuff.
Norris.
If there have been such a gradual diminution of the generative faculty of the plant, that it hath dwindled from nobler animals to puny mice and insects, why was there not the like decay in the production of vegetables? Bentley.
He found the expected council was dwindling into a conventicle, a packed assembly of Italian bishops, not a free convention of fathers. Atterbury.
Religious societies, though begun with excellent intentions, are said to have dwindled into factious clubs. Swift.

3. To wear away; to lose health; to grow feeble.

Weary sev'nnights nine times nine,
Shall he dwindle, peak, and pine.
Shakesp. Macbeth.

It doth end in a dysentery, pains of the hæmorrhoids, inflammations of any of the lower parts, diabetes, a continual pissing, or a hot dysury, difficulty of making water. Harvey.

E HAS two sounds; long, as scēne, and short, as mĕn. E is the most frequent vowel in the English language; for it not only is used like the rest in the beginning or end of words, but has the peculiar quality of lengthening the foregoing vowel, as, căn, cāne; măn, māne; găp, gāpe; glăd, glāde; brĕd, brēde; chĭn, chīne; wĭp, wīpe; thĭn, thīne; nŏd, nōde; tŭn, tūne; plŭm, plūme. Yet it sometimes occurs final, where yet the foregoing vowel is not lengthened; as gŏne, knowlĕdge, ĕdge, gĭve. Anciently almost every word ended with e, as for can, canne; for year, yeare; for great, greate; for need, neede; for flock, flocke. It is probable that this e final had at first a soft sound, like the female e of the French; and that afterwards it was in poetry either mute or vocal, as the verse required, 'till at last it became universally silent.

Ea has the sound of e long: the e is commonly lengthened rather by the immediate addition of a than by the apposition of e to the end of the word; as mĕn, mēan; sĕl, sēal; mĕt, mēat; nĕt, nēat.

EACH. pron. [elc, Sax. elch, Dut. ilk, Scottish.]

1. Either of two.

Though your orbs of diff'rent greatness be,
Yet both are from each other's use dispos'd;
His to inclose, and your's to be inclos'd. Dryden.

2. Every one of any number. This sense is rare, except in poetry.

Th' invention all admir'd, and each how he
To be th' inventer miss'd. Milton.

Let each
His adamantine coat gird well, and each
Fit well his helm. Milton.

By hunger, that each other creature tames,
Thou art not to be harm'd, therefore not mov'd;
Thy temperance invincible besides.
Milton's Paradise Regained.

Wise Pluto said, the world with men was stor'd,
That succour each to other might afford. Denham.

To EACH the correspondent word is other, whether it be used of two, or of a greater number.

'Tis said they eat each other. Shakesp. Macbeth.

Let each esteem other better than themselves.
Phil. ii. 3.

Loveliest of women! heaven is in thy soul;
Beauty and virtue shine for ever round thee,
Bright'ning each other! Thou art all divine.
Addison's Cato.

EAD. [ead. ed.] in the compound, and eadig in the simple names, denotes happiness or blessedness. Thus Eadward is a happy preserver; Eadulph, happy assistance; Eadgar, happy power; Eadwin, happy conqueror; which Macarius Eupolemus, Fausta, Fortunatus, Felicianus, &c. do in some measure resemble. Ead may also in some cases be derived from the Saxon eath, which signifies easy, gentle, mild. Gib. Camden.

EA'GER. adj. [eazop, Sax. aigre, Fr.]

1. Struck with desire; ardently wishing; keenly desirous; vehement in desire; hotly longing.

Of action eager, and intent of thought,
The chiefs your honourable danger sought.
Dryden's Ovid.

Eager to read the rest, Achates came. Dryd. Æn.

With joy th' ambitious youth his mother heard,
And, eager for the journey, soon prepar'd;
He longs the world beneath him to survey,
To guide the chariot, and to give the day. Dryd.

Love inflam'd, and eager on his bliss,
Smother'd her words. Addison's Ovid.

2. It is used sometimes with of, sometimes with for, sometimes with on or after before the thing sought.

3. Hot of disposition; vehement; ardent; impetuous.

Apt as well to quicken the spirits as to allay that which is too eager. Hooker.

Nor do the eager clamours of disputants yield more relief to eclipsed truth, than did the sounding brass of old to the labouring moon.
Glanville's Scepsis.

Imperfect zeal is hot and eager, without knowledge. Sprat.

Eager his tone, and ardent were his eyes. Dryd.

A man, charged with a crime of which he thinks himself innocent, is apt to be too eager in his own defence. Dryden.

4. Quick; busy; easily put in action.

His Numidian genius
Is well dispos'd to mischief, were he prompt
And eager on it; but he must be spurr'd. Addis. Cato.

5. Sharp; sour; acid.

With a sudden vigour it doth posset
And curd, like eager droppings into milk,
The thin and wholesome blood. Shakesp. Hamlet.

6. Keen; severe; biting.

The air bites shrewdly; it is very cold.
—It is a nipping and an eager air. Shak. Hamlet.

The flesh shrinketh, but the bone resisteth, whereby the cold becometh more eager.
Bacon's Nat. Hist.

7. Brittle; inflexible; not ductile. A cant word of artificers.

Gold will be sometimes so eager, as artists call it, that it will as little endure the hammer as glass itself. Locke.

EA'GERLY. adv. [from eager.]

1. With great ardour of desire; with impetuosity of inclination.

To the holy war how fast and eagerly did men go, when the priest persuaded them that whosoever died in that expedition was a martyr. South.

How eagerly he flew, when Europe's fate
Did for the seed of future actions wait. Stepney.

2. Ardently; hotly.

Brutus gave the word too early,
Who having some advantage on Octavius,
Took it too eagerly; his soldiers fell to spoil,
Whilst we by Anthony were all inclos'd. Shakesp.

3. Keenly; sharply.

Abundance of rain froze so eagerly as it fell, that it seemed the depth of winter had of a sudden been come in. Knolles's Hist. of the Turks.

EA'GERNESS. n. s. [from eager.]

1. Keenness of desire; ardour of inclination.

She knew her distance, and did angle for me,
Madding my eagerness with her restraint. Shakesp.

Have you not seen, when whistled from the fist,
Some faulcon stoop'd at what her eye design'd,
And, with her eagerness the quarry miss'd. Dryd.

The sprightliness and strong bent of the mind after knowledge, if not warily regulated, is often an hindrance to it. Locke.

Detraction and obloquy are received with as much eagerness as wit and humour. Addis. Freeholder.

Juba lives to catch
That dear embrace, and to return it too,
With mutual warmth and eagerness of love.
Addison's Cato.

His continued application to publick affairs diverts him from those pleasures, which are pursued with eagerness by princes who have not the publick so much at heart. Addison.

The things of this world, with whatever eagerness they engage our pursuit, leave us still empty and unsatisfied with their fruition. Rogers.

2. Impetuosity; vehemence; violence.

It finds them in the eagerness and height of their devotion; they are speechless for the time that it continues, and prostrate and dead when it departs. Dryden.

I'll kill thee with such eagerness of haste,
As fiends, let loose, would lay all nature waste.
Dryden.

EA'GLE. n. s. [aigle, Fr. aquila, Lat. ealler, Erse.]

1. A bird of prey, which, as it is reported, renews its age when it grows old. It is also said not to drink at all, like other birds with sharp claws. It is given out, that when an eagle sees its young so well grown as to venture upon flying, it hovers over their nest, and excites them to imitate it, and take their flight; and when it sees them weary, or fearful, it takes them upon its back. Eagles are said to be extremely sharp-sighted, and, when they take flight, spring perpendicularly upward, with their eyes steadily fixed upon the sun. Calmet.

Draw forth the monsters of th' abyss profound,
Or fetch th' aerial eagle to the ground. Pope.

2. The standard of the ancient Romans.

Arts still follow'd where Rome's eagles flew.
Pope.

EA'GLE-EYED. adj. [from eagle and eyed.] Sharp-sighted as an eagle.

As he was quick and perspicacious, so was he inwardly eagle-eyed, and versed in the humours of his subjects. Howel.

Every one is eagle-eyed to see
Another's faults and his deformity. Dryden.

EA'GLESPEED. n. s. [eagle and speed.] Swiftness like that of an eagle.

Abrupt, with eaglespeed she cut the sky,
Instant invisible to mortal eye. Pope.

EA'GLESTONE. n. s. A stone said to be found at the entrance of the holes in which the eagles make their nests, and affirmed to have a particular virtue in defending the eagle's nest from thunder. Calmet.

The eaglestone contains, in a cavity within it, a small loose stone, which rattles when it is shaken; and every fossil, with a nucleus in it, has obtained the name. The analogy between a stone, thus containing another within it, or, as the fanciful writers express it, pregnant with another, and a woman big with child, led people to imagine that it must have great virtues and effects in accelerating or retarding delivery; so that, if tied to the arm of a woman with child, it prevents abortion; and if to the leg, it promotes delivery. On such idle and imaginary virtues was raised all the credit which this famous fossil possessed for many ages. Hill's Materia Medica.

If you stop the holes of a hawk's bell it will make no ring, but a flat noise or rattle; and so doth the ætites, or eaglestone, which hath a little stone in with it Bacon.

EA'GLET. n. s. [from eagle.] A young eagle.

This treason of his sons did the king express in an emblem, wherein was an eagle with three eaglets tyring on her breast, and the fourth pecking at one of her eyes. Davies.

EA'GRE. n. s. [ægir, in Runick, is the ocean; eggia, in Islandick, is to agitate, to incite.] A tide swelling above another tide, observable in the river Severn.

For as an eagre rides in triumph o'er the tide,
The tyrant passions, hope and fear,
Did in extremes appear,
And flash'd upon the soul with equal force. Dryd.

EA'LDERMAN. n. s. [ealbeɲman, Sax.] The name of a Saxon magistrate; alderman.

EAME. n. s. [eam, Sax. oom, Dut.] Uncle: a word still used in the wilder parts of Staffordshire.

Daughter, says she, fly, fly; behold thy dame
Foreshows the treason of thy wretched came!
Fairfax.

When I am king, claim thou of me
The earldom of Hereford. Shakesp. Richard III.

EA'RLINESS. n. s. [from early.] Quickness of any action with respect to something else: as, earliness in the morning, the act of rising soon with respect to the sun; earliness of growth, the act of growing up soon in comparison with other things of the same kind.

The next morning we, having striven with the sun's earliness, were beyond the prospect of the highest turrets. Sidney.

The goodness of the crop is great gain, if the goodness answer the earliness of coming up. Bacon.

EA'RLY. adj. [æɾ, Sax. before.] Soon with respect to something else: as, in the morning, with respect to the sun; in time, with respect to creation; in the season, in comparison with other products.

I am a fainted wether of the flock,
Meeteth the death: the weakest kind of fruit
Drops earliest to the ground, and so let me. Shak.

It is a curiosity to have several fruits upon one tree; and the more when some of them come early, and some come late. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

God made all the world, that he might be worshipped in some parts of the world; and therefore, in the first and most early times of the church, what care did he manifest to have such places erected to his honour? South.

The nymphs, forsaking ev'ry cave and spring,
Their early fruit and milk-white turtles bring.
Pope.

Sickness is early old age: it teaches us diffidence in our earthly state, and inspires us with thoughts of a future. Pope.

Oh soul of honour!
Oh early heroe! Smith's Phædra and Hippolitus.

EA'RLY. adv. [from the adjective.] Soon; betimes.

Early before the morn, with crimson ray,
The windows of bright heav'n opened had.

To* EARN. v. a. [eapnian, Sax.]

1. To gain as the reward or wages of labour, or any performance.

Those that have joined with their honour great perils, are less subject to envy; for men think that they earn their honours hardly. Bacon's Essa.

Winning cheap the high repute,
Which he through hazard huge must earn. Milt.

I to the evil turn
My obvious breast; arming to overcome
By suffering, and earn rest from labour won.
Milton.

Men may discern
From what consummate virtue I have chose
This perfect man, by merit call'd my Son,
To earn salvation for the sons of men. Milton.

Since they all beg, it were better for the state o keep them, even although they earned nothing.
Graunt's Bills of Mortality.

This is the great expence of the poor, that takes up almost all their earnings. Locke.

The poems gained the plagiary wealth, while the author hardly earned his bread by repeating them. Pope on Homer.

After toiling twenty days,
To earn a stock of pence and praise,
Thy labour's grown the critick's prey. Swift.

2. To obtain as a consequence of action.

I can't say whore;
It does abhor me, now I speak the word:
To do the act, that might th' addition earn,
Not the world's mass of vanity could make me.
Shakesp.

EA'RNEST. adj. [eopnerr, Sax.]

1. Ardent in any affection; warm; zealous; importunate.

He which prayeth in due sort, is thereby made the more attentive to hear; and he which heareth, the more earnest to pray for the time which we bestow, as well in the one as the other. Hooker.

2. Intent; fixed; eager.

On that prospect strange,
Their earnest eyes they fix'd; imagining,
For one forbidden tree, a multitude
Now ris'n, to work them further woe or shame.
Milton.

They are never more earnest to disturb us, than when they see us most earnest in this duty. Duppa.

3. Serious; important. Some say in earnest, not in jest.

They whom earnest lets do often hinder from being partakers of the whole, have yet this the length of divine service, opportunity for access unto some reasonable part thereof. Hooker.

EA'RNEST. n. s. [from the adjective.]

1. Seriousness; a serious event, not a jest; reality, not a feigned appearance.

Take heed that this jest do not one day turn to earnest. Sidney.

Earnestly invoke the goodness and power of an all-merciful and almighty God. Smalridge.

2. Eagerly; desirously.

Why so earnestly seek you to put up that letter. Shakesp.

My soul, more earnestly releas'd,
Will outstrip her's; as bullets flown before,
A latter bullet may o'ertake, the powder being more. Donne.

EA'RNESTNESS. n. s. [from earnest.]

1. Eagerness; warmth; vehemence; impetuosity.

Often with a solemn earnestness,
More than, indeed, belong'd to such a trifle,
He begg'd of me to steal it. Shakesp. Othello.

Audacity and confidence doth in business so great effects, as a man may doubt, that besides the very daring and earnestness, and persisting and importunity, there should be some secret binding, and stooping of other men's spirits to such persons.
Bacon's Nat. History.

Marcus is overwarm; his fond complaints
Have so much earnestness and passion in them,
I hear him with a secret kind of horror,
And tremble at his vehemence of temper.
Addison's Cato.

2. Solemnity; zeal; seriousness.

There never was a charge maintained with such a shew of gravity and earnestness, which had a slighter foundation to support it. Atterbury.

3. Solitude; care; intenseness.

With overstraining, and earnestness of finishing their pieces, they often did them more harm than good. Dryden.

EARSH. n. s. [from ear to plow.] A plowed field. Not now in use.

Fires oft are good on barren earshes made,
With crackling flames to burn the stubble blade.
May's Virgil.

EARTH. n. s. [eopr, Sax.]

1. The element distinct from air, fire, or water: soil; terrene matter.

The smiling god is seen; while water, earth,
And air attest his bounty. Thomson.

2. The terraqueous globe; the world.

Nought so vile that on the earth doth live,
But to the earth some special good doth give.
Shakesp.

This solid globe we live upon is called the earth, which word, taken in a more limited sense, signifies such parts of this globe as are capable, being exposed to the air, to give rooting and nourishment to plants, so that they may stand and grow in it. Locke.

3. Different modification of terrene matter. In this sense it has a plural.

The five genera of earths are, 1. Boles. 2. Clays. 3 Marls. 4 Ochres. 5. Tripelas. Hill's Mat. Medic.

Earths are opake, insipid, and, when dried, friable, or consisting of parts easy to separate, and soluble in water; not disposed to burn, flame, or take fire. Woodward.

4. This world opposed to other scenes of existence.

What are these,
So wither'd and so wild in their attire,
That look not like th' inhabitants o' th' earth,
And yet are on't? Shakesp. Macbeth.

They can judge as fitly of his worth,
As I can of those mysteries which heav'n
Will not have earth to know. Shakesp. Coriolanus.

5. The inhabitants of the earth.

The whole earth was of one language. Gen. xi. 1.

6. Country; distinct region.

In ten set battles have we driven back
These heathen Saxons, and regain'd our earth,
As earth recovers from the ebbing tide. Dryden.

7. The act of turning up the ground in tillage. [from ear to plow.]

Such land as ye break up for barley to sow,
Two earths, at the least, ere ye sow it bestow.

EA'RTHLY. adj. [from earth.]

1. Not heavenly; vile; mean; sordid.

But I remember now
I'm in this earthly world, where to do harm
Is often laudable; to do good, sometime
Accounted dangerous folly. Shakesp. Macbeth.

When faith and love, which parted from thee never,
Had ripen'd thy just soul to dwell with God,
Meekly thou didst resign this earthly load
Of death, call'd life. Milton.

2. Belonging only to our present state; not spiritual.

Our common necessities, and the lack which we all have as well of ghostly as of earthly favours, is in each kind easily known. Hooker.

You have scarce time
To steal from spiritual leisure a brief span,
To keep your earthly audit. Shakesp. Henry VIII.

It must be our solemn business and endeavour, at fit seasons, to turn the stream of our thoughts from earthly towards divine objects. Atterbury.

3. Corporeal; not mental.

Great grace that old man to him given had,
For God he often saw, from heaven hight,
All were his earthly eyen both blunt and bad.
Spenser.

Sudden he view'd, in spite of all her art,
An earthly lover lurking at her heart. Pope.

4. Any thing in the world; a female hyperbole.

Oh! if to dance all night, and dress all day,
Charm'd the small-pox, or chas'd old-age away,
Who would not scorn what housewife's cares produce?
Or who would learn one earthly thing of use? Pope.

EA'RTHNUT. n. s. [earth and nut.] A pignut; a root in shape and size like a nut.

Where there are earthnuts in several patches, though the roots lie deep in the ground, and the stalks be dead, the swine will by their scent root only where they grow. Ray.

EA'RTHQUAKE. n. s. [earth and quake.] Tremor or convulsion of the earth.

This subterranean heat or fire being in any part of the earth stopt, by some accidental glut or obstruction in the passages through which it used to ascend, and being preternaturally assembled in greater quantity into one place, causes a great rarefaction and intumescence of the water of the abyss, putting it into very great commotions; and making the like effort upon the earth, expanded upon the face of the abyss, occasions that agitation and concussion which we call an earthquake. Woodward's Natural History.

These tumults were like an earthquake, shaking the very foundations of all, than which nothing in the world hath more of horrour. King Charles.

Was it his youth, his valour, or success,
These might perhaps be found in other men:
'Twas that respect, that awful homage paid me;
That fearful love which trembled in his eyes,
And with a silent earthquake shook his soul.
Dryden.

The country, by reason of its vast caverns and subterraneous fires, has been miserably torn by earthquakes, so that the whole face of it is quite changed. Addison on Italy.

EA'RTHSHAKING. adj. [earth and shake.] Having power to shake the earth, or to raise earthquakes.

By the earthshaking Neptune's mace,
And Tethys grave majestick pace. Milton.

Now scarce withdrawn the fierce earthshaking pow'r,
Jove's daughter Pallas watch'd the fav'ring hour;
Back to their caves she bade the winds to fly,
And hush'd the blustering brethren of the sky.
Pope.

EA'RTHWORM. n. s. [earth and worm.]

1. A worm bred under ground.

Worms are found in snow commonly, like earthworms, and therefore it is not unlike that it may likewise put forth plants. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

Mine is the shipwreck, in a watry sign;
And in an earthy, the dark dungeon thine. Dryd.

5. Not mental; gross; not refined.

Teach me, dear creature, how to think and speak;
Lay open to my earthy gross conceit,
Smother'd in errors, feeble, shallow, weak,
The folded meaning of your words deceit. Shak.

Nor is my flame
So earthy, as to need the dull material force
Of eyes, or lips, or cheeks. Denham's Sophy.

EASE. n. s. [aise, Fr.]

1. Quiet; rest; undisturbed tranquillity; not solicitude.

We should not find her half so brave and bold
To lead it to the wars and to the seas;
To make it suffer watchings, hunger, cold,
When it might feed with plenty, rest with ease.
Davies.

The priest on skins of off'ring takes his ease,
And nightly visions in his slumber sees. Dryd. Æn.

2. Freedom from pain; a neutral state between pain and pleasure.

That which we call ease is only an indolency, or a freedom from pain. L'Estrange.

It is a small crime to wound himself by anguish of heart, to deprive himself of all the pleasures, or eases, or enjoyments of life? Temple.

3. Rest after labour; intermission of labour.

Give yourselves ease from the fatigue of waiting.
Swift.

4. Facility; not difficulty.

The willing metal will obey thy hand,
Following with ease, if favour'd by thy fate,
Thou art foredoom'd to view the Stygian state;
If not, no labour can the tree constrain,
And strength of stubborn arms and steel are vain.
Dryden.

5. Unconstraint; freedom from harshness, formality, forced behaviour, or conceits.

True ease in writing comes from art, not chance;
As those move easiest who have learn'd to dance.
Pope.

6. At Ease. In a state of undisturbed leisure; without pain; without anxiety.

Lucan content with praise, may lie at ease
In costly grotts and marble palaces. Dryden's Juv.

Men of parts and penetration were not idly to dispute at their ease, but were to act according to the result of their debates. Locke.

No body is under an obligation to know every thing: knowledge and science in general is the business only of those who are at ease and leisure. Locke.

To* EASE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To free from pain.

Help and ease children the best you can; but by no means bemoan them. Locke.

2. To assuage; to mitigate; to alleviate.

Thy father made our yoke grievous, now therefore ease thou somewhat the grievous servitude.
2 Chron.

Complain, queen Margaret, and tell thy grief;
It shall be eas'd, if France can yield relief. Shak.

As if with sports my sufferings I could ease.
Dryden.

Though he speaks of such medicines as procure sleep, and ease pain, he doth not determine their doses. Arbuthnot.

Will he for sacrifice our sorrows ease?
And can our tears reverse his firm decrees? Prior.

3. To relieve from labour, or any thing that offends: with of before the thing.

If ere night the gath'ring clouds we fear,
A song will help the beating storm to bear;
And that thou may'st not be too late abroad
Sing, and I'll ease thy shoulders of thy load. Dryd.

I will ease me of mine adversaries. Isaiah, i. 24.

No body feels pain that he wishes not to be eased of, with a desire equal to that pain, and inseparable from it. Locke.

EA'SEFUL. adj. [ease and full.] Quiet; peaceable; fit for rest.

I spy a black, suspicious, threat'ning cloud,
That will encounter with our glorious sun,
Ere he attain his easeful western bed.
Shakesp. Henry VI.

EA'SEMENT. n. s. [from ease.]

1. Assistance; support; relief from expences.

He has the advantage of a free lodging, and some other easements. Swift.

2. [In law.] A service that one neighbour has of another by charter or prescription, without profit; as a way through his ground, a sink, or such like. Cowell.

EA'SILY. adv. [from easy.]

1. Without difficulty.

Sounds move swiftly, and at great distance; but they require a medium well disposed, and their transmission is easily stopped. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

She ask'd the reason of his woe;
She ask'd, but with an air and mien
That made it easily foreseen.
She [illegible]'d too much to know. Prior.

2. Without pain; without disturbance; in tranquillity.

Is it not to bid defiance to all mankind to condemn their universal opinions and designs, if, instead of passing your life as well and easily, you resolve to pass it as ill and as miserable as you can? Temple.

3. Readily; without reluctance.

I can easily resign to others the praise of your illustrious family. Dryden's Ded. to State of Inno.
Not soon provok'd, she easily forgives;
And much she suffers, as she much believes. Prior.

EA'SINESS. n. s. [from easy.]

1. Freedom from difficulty.

Believe me, friends, loud tumults are not laid
With half the easiness that they are rais'd.
Ben Jonson.

Easiness and difficulty are relative terms, and relate to some power; and a thing may be difficult to a weak man, which yet may be easy to the same person, when assisted with a greater strength.
Tillotson.

The seeming easiness of Pindarick verse has made it spread, but it has not been considered.
Dryden.

You left a conquest more than half achiev'd,
And for whose easiness I almost griev'd. Dryden.

This plea, under a colour of friendship to religion, invites men to it by the easiness of the terms it offers. Rogers.

2. Flexibility; compliance; readiness; not opposition; not reluctance.

His yielding unto them in one thing might happily put them in hope, that time would breed the like easiness of condescending further unto them.
Hooker.

Since the custom of easiness to alter and change laws is so evil, no doubt but to bear a tolerable sore is better than to venture on a dangerous remedy. Hooker.

Give to him, and he shall but laugh at your easiness; save his life, but, when you have done, look to your own. South.

The safest way to secure honesty, is to lay the foundations of it early in liberality, and an easiness to part with to others whatever they have or like themselves. Locke.

3. Freedom from constraint; not effort; not formality.

Abstruse and mystick thoughts you must express
With painful care, but seeming easiness;
For truth shines brightest through the plainest dress. Roscommon.

4. Rest; tranquillity; ease; freedom from pain.

I think the reason I have assigned hath a great interest in that rest and easiness we enjoy when asleep. Ray.

EAST. n. s. [eopt, Sax. heos, Erse.]

1. The quarter where the sun rises: opposite to the West.

They counting forwards towards the East, did allow 180 degrees to the Portugals eastward.
Abbot.

2. The regions in the eastern parts of the world.

I would not be the villain that thou thinkest
For the whole space that 's in the tyrant's grasp,
And the rich East to boot. Shakesp. Macbeth.

The gorgeous East, with richest hand,
Pours on her kings barbarick, pearl and gold. Milt.

EA'STER. n. s. [eapcne, Sax. ooster, Dut.] The day on which the Christian church commemorates our Saviour's resurrection.

Didst thou not fall out with a taylor for wearing his new doublet before Easter?
Shakesp. Romeo and Juliet.

Victor's unbrother-like heat towards the Eastern churches, in the controversy about Easter, fomented that difference into a schism. Decay of Piety.

EA'STERLING. n. s. [from East.]

1. A native of some country eastward to another.

He oft in battle vanquished
Those spoilful, rich, and swarming Easterlings.
Spenser.

2. A species of waterfowl.

EA'STERLY. adj. [from East.]

1. Coming from the parts toward the East.

When the easterly winds or breezes are kept off by some high mountains from the vallies, whereby the air, wanting motion, doth become exceeding unhealthful. Raleigh.

2. Lying towards the East.

These give us a view of the most easterly, southerly, and westerly parts of England.
Graunt's Bills of Mortality.

3. Looking towards the East.

Water he chuses clear, light, without taste or smell, drawn from springs with an easterly exposition. Arbuthnot.

EA'STERN. adj. [from East.]

1. Dwelling or found in the East; oriental.

Like eastern kings a lazy state they keep. Pope.
Eastern tyrants from the light of heaven
Seclude their bosom slaves. Thomson.

2. Lying or being towards the East.

The eastern end of the isle rises up in precipices.
Addison.

3. Going towards the East.

A ship at sea has no certain method in either her eastern or western voyages, or even in her less distant sailing from the coasts, to know her longitude, or how much she is gone eastward or westward, as can easily be known in any clear day or night how much she's gone northward or southward.
Addison.

4. Looking towards the East.

Th' angel caught
Our ling'ring parents, and to th' eastern gate
Led them direct. Milton.

EA'STWARD. adv. [East, and toward.] Towards the East.

The moon, which performs its motion swifter than the sun, gets eastward out of his rays, and appears when the sun is set. Brown's Vulg. Err.

What shall we do, or where direct our flight?
Eastward, as far as I could cast my sight,
From op'ning heav'ns, I saw descending light.
Dryden.

EA'SY. adj. [from ease.]

1. Not difficult.

The service of God, in the solemn assembly of saints, is a work, though easy, yet withal very weighty, and of great respect. Hooker.

How much is it in every one's power to make resolutions to himself, such as he may keep, is easy for every one to try. Locke.

2. Not causing difficulty.

The whole island was probably cut into several easy ascents, and planted with variety of palaces.
Addison on Italy.

3. Quiet; at rest; not harassed; unmolested; secure; not anxious.

Those that are easy in their conditions, or their minds, refuse often to enter upon publick charges or employment. Temple.

Keep your thoughts easy and free, the only temper wherein the mind is capable of receiving new informations. Locke.

A marriage of love is pleasant, a marriage of interest easy, and a marriage where both meet happy. Addison's Spectator.

When men are easy in their circumstances, they are naturally enemies to innovations. Addis. Frech.

A man should direct all his studies and endeavours at making himself easy now, and happy hereafter. Addison's Spectator.

We plainly feel whether at this instant we are easy or uneasy, happy or miserable. Smalridge.

4. Free from pain.

Bold adventure to discover wide
That dismal world, if any clime perhaps
Might yield them easier habitation. Milton.

Pleasure has been the business of my life,
And every change of fortune easy to me,
Because I still was easy to myself. Dryden.

5. Complying; unresisting; credulous.

Baited with reasons not unplausible,
Win me into the easy hearted man,
And hug him into snares. Milton.

With such deceits he gain'd their easy hearts,
Too prone to credit his perfidious arts. Dryd. Æn.

The kindest father I have ever found him,
Easy and good, and bounteous to my wishes.
Addison's Cato.

6. Ready; not unwilling.

Pity and he are one;
So merciful a king did never live,
Loth to revenge, and easy to forgive. Dryden.

7. Free from want of more.

They should be allowed each of them such a rent as would make them easy. Swift.

8. Not constrained; not stiff.

Those move easiest that have learn'd to dance.
Pope.

Praise the easy vigour of a line,
Where Denham's strength and Waller's sweetness join. Pope.

To EAT. v. a. preterite ate, or eat; part. eat, or eaten. [etan, Sax. itan, Got. eich, Erse.]

1. To devour with the mouth.

Locust shall eat the residue of that which is escaped from the hail, and shall eat every tree which groweth. Exod. x. 5.

Other states cannot be accused for not staying for the first blow, or for not accepting Polyphemus's courtesy, to be the last that shall be eaten up. Bacon's War with Spain.

Even wormwood, eat with bread, will not bite, because it is mixed with a great quantity of spittle. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

2. To consume; to corrode.

Thou best of gold art worst of gold,
Others less fine in carrat is more precious,
Preserving life in med'cine potable:
But thou, most fine, most honour'd, most renown'd,
Hast eat thy bearer up. Shakesp. Henry IV.

They entail a secret curse upon their estates, which does either insensibly waste and consume it, or eat out the heart and comfort of it. Tillotson.

Eating cares,
Lydian airs. Milton.

There arises a necessity of keeping the surface even, either by pressure or eating medicines, that the eminence of the flesh may not resist the fibres of the skin in their tendency to cover the wound.
Sharp's Surgery.

3. To swallow back; to retract. This is only used of a man's word.

They cannot hold, but burst out those words which afterwards they are forced to eat
Hakewill on Providence

Credit were not to be lost
B' a brave knight errant of the post,
That eats, perfidiously, his word,
And swears his ears through a two inch board.
Hudibras.

To EAT. v. n.

1. To go to meals; to take meals; to feed.

He did eat continually at the king's table.
2 Sam. ix. 13.

And when the scribes and pharisees saw him eat with publicans and sinners, they said unto his disciples, How is it that he eateth with publicans and sinners? Mark, ii. 16.

2. To take food.

He that will not eat till he has a demonstration that it will nourish him, he that will not stir till he infallibly knows the business he goes about will succeed, will have little else to do but sit still and perish. Locke.

3. To be maintained in food.

The righteous eateth to the satisfying of his soul, but the belly of the wicked shall want. Prov. xiii. 25.

Thou art past the tyrant's stroke;
Care no more to cloath and eat. Shakesp. Cymb.

But, thanks to my indulgent stars, I eat,
Since I have found the secret to be great. Prior.

4. To make way by corrosion.

The plague of sin has even altered his nature, and eaten into his very essentials. South.

A prince's court eats too much into the income of a poor state. Addison's Italy.

EA'TABLE. adj. [from eat.] That may be eaten.

EA'TABLE. n. s. Any thing that may be eaten.

If you all sorts of persons would engage,
Suit well your eatables to ev'ry age.
King's Art of Cookery.

EA'TER. n. s. [from eat.]

1. One that eats any thing.

The Caribees and the Cannibals, almost all, are eaters of man's flesh. Abbot's Descrip. of the World.

A knave, a rascal, an eater of broken meats.
Shakesp.

If the taste of this fruit maketh the eaters like gods, why remainest thou a beast. Brown's Vulg. Er.

As if the lotus grew only here, the virtue of whose fruit is to cause in the eaters an oblivion of all other soils. Howell.

2. A corrosive.

EATH. adj. [eaƀ, Sax.] Easy; not difficult. An old word.

Where case abounds, it's eath to do amiss.
Fairy Queen.

What works not beauty, man's relenting mind
Is eath to move with plaints and shews of woe.
Fairfax.

The way was straight and eath. Fairfax.

EATH. adv. [from the adjective.] Easily. An old word.

Who hath the world not try'd,
From the right way full eath may wander wide.
Hubb. Tale.

EA'TINGHOUSE. n. s. [eat and house.] A house where provisions are sold ready dressed.

An hungry traveller stept into an eatinghouse for his dinner. L'Estrange.

EAVES. n. s. [eɒeɣe, Sax.] The edges of the roof which overhang the house.

Every night he comes
With musick of all sorts, and songs compos'd
To her unworthiness: it nothing steads us
To chide him from our eaves; for he persists,
As if his life lay on't. Shak. All's well that ends well.

His tears run down his beard, like Winter drops
From eaves of reeds. Shakesp. Tempest.

If in the beginning of Winter the drops of the eaves of houses come more slowly down than they use, it portendeth a hard and frosty Winter. Bacon.

Usher'd with a shower still,
When the gust hath blown his fill,
Ending on the rustling leaves,
With minute drops from off the eaves. Milton.

The icicles hang down from the eaves of houses.
Woodward.

To EA'VESDROP. v. a. [eaves and drop.] To catch what comes from the eaves; in common phrase, to listen under windows.

EA'VESDROPPER. n. s. [eaves and drop.] A listener under windows; an insidious listener.

Under our tents I'll play the eavesdropper,
To hear if any mean to shrink from me. Shakesp.

EBB. n. s. [ebba, eƿloo, Sax. ebbe, Dut.]

1. The reflux of the tide towards the sea: opposed to flow.

The clear sun on his wide wat'ry glass
Gaz'd hot, and of the fresh wave largely drew,
As after thirst; which made their flowing shrink
From standing lake to tripping ebb, that stole
With soft foot tow'rds the deep. Milton.

Hither the seas at stated times resort,
And shove the loaden vessels into port;
Then with a gentle ebb retire again,
And render back their cargo to the main.
Addison on Italy.

2. Decline; decay; waste.

You have finished all the war, and brought all things to that low ebb which you speak of.
Spenser on Ireland.

This tide of man's life, after it once turneth and declineth, ever runneth with a perpetual ebb and falling stream, but never floweth again.
Raleigh's History.

Thus all the treasure of our flowing years,
Our ebb of life for ever takes away. Roscommon.

The greatest age for poetry was that of Augustus Cæsar, yet painting was then at its lowest ebb, and perhaps sculpture was also declining. Dryden.

Near my apartment let him pris'ner be,
That I his hourly ebbs of life may see. Dryden.

What is it he aspires to?
Is it not this? To shed the slow remains,
His last poor ebb of blood in your defence.
Addison's Cato.

To EBB. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To flow back towards the sea: opposed to flow.

Though my tide of blood
Hath proudly flow'd in vanity till now,
Now it doth turn and ebb back to the sea. Shak.

From thence the tide of fortune left their shore,
And ebb'd much faster than it flow'd before.
Dryden's Æn.

2. To decline; to decay; to waste.

Well, I am standing water:
——I'll teach you how to flow.
——Do so: to ebb
Hereditary sloth instructs me. Shak. Tempest.

But oh, he ebbs! the smiling waves decay!
For ever lovely stream, for ever stay! Halifax.

E'BEN. E'BON. E'BONY. n. s. [ebenus, Lat.] A hard, heavy, black, valuable wood, which admits a fine gloss.

If the wood be very hard, as ebony, or lignum vitæ, they are to turn: they use not the same tools they do for soft woods. Moxon's Mech. Exer.

Oft by the winds extinct the signal lies,
Ere night has half roll'd round her ebon throne.
Gay.

EBRI'ETY. n. s. [ebrietas, Lat.] Drunkenness; intoxication by strong liquors.

Bitter almonds, as an antidote against ebriety, hath commonly failed. Brown's Vulg. Err.

EBRI'LLADE. n. s. [Fr.] A check of the bridle which a horseman gives a horse, by a jerk of one rein, when he refuses to turn.

EBRIO'SITY. n. s. [ebriositas, Lat.] Habitual drunkenness.

That religion which excuseth Noah in surprisal, will neither acquit ebriosity nor ebriety in their intended perversion. Brown.

EBULLI'TION. n. s. [ebullio, Lat.]

1. The act of boiling up with heat.

2. Any intestine motion.

The dissolution of gold and silver disagree; so that in their mixture there is great ebullition, darkness, and, in the end, a precipitation of a black powder. Bacon.

Iron, in aqua fortis, will fall into ebullition with noise and emication; as also a crasse and fumid exhalation, caused from the combat of the sulphur of iron with the acid and nitrous spirits of aqua fortis. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

3. That struggling or effervescence which arises from the mingling together any alkalizate and acid liquor; any intestine violent motion of the parts of a fluid, occasioned by the struggling of particles of different properties. Quincy.

When aqua fortis, or spirit of vitriol, poured upon filings of iron, dissolves the filings with a great heat and ebullition, is not the heat and ebullition effected by a violent motion of the parts; and does not their motion argue, that the acid parts of the liquor rush towards the parts of the metal with violence, and run forcibly into its pores, 'till they get between its outmost particles and the main mass of the metal? Newton.

A violent cold, as well as heat, may be produced by this ebullition, for if sal ammoniack, or any pure volatile alkali, dissolved in water, be mixed with an acid, an ebullition, with a greater degree of cold, will ensue. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

ECCE'NTRICAL. ECCE'NTRICK. adj. [eccentricus, Lat.]

1. Deviating from the centre.

2. Not having the same centre with another circle: such circles were supposed by the Ptolemaick philosophy.

Astronomers, to solve the phænomena, framed to their conceits eccentricks and epicycles, and a wonderful engine of orbs. Bacon.

Thither his course he bends
Through the calm firmament; but up or down,
By centrick or eccentrick, hard to tell. Milton.

They build, unbuild, contrive,
To save appearances: they gird the sphere
With centrick, and eccentrick, scribbled o'er,
Cycle, and epicycle, orb in orb. Milton.

Whence is it that planets move all one and the same way in orbs concentrick, while comets move all manner of ways in orbs very eccentrick?
Newton's Opticks.

3. Not terminating in the same point; not directed by the same principle.

Whatsoever affairs pass such a man's hands, he crooketh them to his own ends; which must needs be often eccentrick to the ends of his master.
Bacon's Essays.

4. Irregular; anomalous; deviating from stated and constant methods.

This motion, like others of the times, seems eccentrick and irregular. King Charles.

A character of an eccentrick virtue, is the more exact image of human life, because it is not wholly exempted from its frailties. Dryden.

Then from whate'er we can to sense produce,
Common and plain, or wond'rous and abstruse,
From nature's constant or eccentrick laws,
The thoughtful soul this gen'ral inference draws,
That an effect must presuppose a cause. Prior.

ECCENTRI'CITY. n. s. [from eccentrick.]

1. Deviation from a centre.

2. The state of having a different centre from another circle.

In regard of eccentricity, and the epicycle wherein it moveth, the motion of the moon is unequal.
Brown.

By reason of the sun's eccentricity to the earth, and obliquity to the equator, he appears to us to move unequally. Holder.

3. Excursion from the proper orb.

The duke at his return from his eccentricity, for so I account favourites abroad, met no good news.
Wotton.

4. Eccentricity of the earth is the distance between the focus and the centre of the earth's elliptick orbit. Harris.

ECCHY'MOSIS. n. s. [ἐκχυμωσις.] Livid spots or blotches in the skin, made by extravasated blood. Quincy.

Ecchymosis may be defined an extravasation of the blood in or under the skin, the skin remaining whole. Wiseman.

Laxations are accompanied with tumour and ecchymosis. Wiseman.

ECCLESIA'STICAL. ECCLESIA'STICK. adj. [ecclesiasticus, Lat.] Relating to the church; not civil.

Is discipline an ecclesiastical matter or civil? If an ecclesiastical, it must belong to the duty of the ministers. Hooker.

Clergymen, otherwise little fond of obscure terms, yet in their sermons are liberal of those which they find in ecclesiastical writers. Swift.

A church of Englandman has a true veneration for the scheme established among us of ecclesiastick government. Swift.

ECCLESIA'STICK. n. s. [from the adjective.] A person dedicated to the ministries of religion.

The ambition of the ecclesiasticks destroyed the purity of the church. Burnet's Theory.

ECCOPRO'TICKS. n. s. [ἔκ and πρόσω.] Such medicines as gently purge the belly, so as to bring away no more than the natural excrements lodged in the intestines.

The body ought to be maintained in its daily excretions by such means as are eccoprotick. Harvey on the Plague.

ECHINA'TE. } adj. [from echinus, Lat.]
ECHINA'TED. } Bristled like an hedgehog; set with prickles.

An echinated pyrites in shape approaches the echinated crystalline balls. Woodward on Fossils.

E'CHINUS. n. s. [Lat.]

1. A hedgehog.
2. A shell fish set with prickles.
3. [With botanists.] The prickly head, cover of the seed, or top of any plant.
4. [In architecture.] A member or ornament, taking its name from the roughness of the carving, resembling the prickly rind of a chesnut, and not unlike the thorny coat of a hedge-hog.

This ornament is used by modern architects in cornices of the Ionick, Corinthian, and Composite orders; and generally set next to the abacus, being carved with anchors, darts, and ovals or eggs. Harris.

E'CHO. n. s. [ἦχω; echo, Lat.]

1. Echo was supposed to have been once a nymph, who pined into a sound for love of Narcissus.

The pleasant myrtle may teach th' unfortunate Echo
In these woods to resound the renowned name of a goddess. Sidney.

2. The return or percussion of any sound.

The sound, filling great spaces in arched lines, cannot be guided; therefore there hath not been any means to make artificial echoes. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

3. The sound returned.

Babbling echo mocks the hounds,
Replying shrilly to the well-tun'd horns,
As if a double hunt were heard at once. Shak.
Wilt thou hunt?
Thy hounds shall make the welkin answer them,
And fetch shrill echoes from their hollow earth.
Shakesp.
O woods, O fountains, hillocks, dales, and bow'rs!
With other echo late I taught your shades
To answer, and resound far other song. Milton.
To you I mourn, nor to the deaf I sing;
The woods shall answer, and the echo ring. Pope.
'Tis not enough no harshness gives offence;
The sound must seem an echo to the sense. Pope.

To E'CHO. v. n.

1. To resound; to give the repercussion of a voice.

At the parting
All the church echo'd. Shak. Taming of the Shrew.
Through rocks and caves the name of Delia sounds;
Delia each cave and echoing rock rebounds. Pope.

2. To be sounded back.

Hark, how the sound disturbs imperious Rome!
Shakes her proud hills, and rolls from dome to dome!
Her mitr'd princes hear the echoing noise,
And, Albion, dread thy wrath and awful voice.
Blackmore.

To E'CHO. v. a. To send back a voice; to return what has been uttered.

Our separatists do but echo the same note.
Decay of Piety.
With peals of shouts the Tyrians praise the song;
Those peals are echo'd by the Trojan throng.
Dryden's Æneid.

One great death deforms the dreary ground;
The echo'd woes from distant rocks resound. Prior.

ECLAIRCI'SSEMENT. n. s. [Fr.] Explanation; the act of clearing up an affair by verbal expostulation.

The eclaircissement ended in the discovery of the informer. Clarendon.

ECLAT. n. s. [Fr.] Splendour; show; lustre. Not English.

Nothing more contributes to the variety, surprize, and eclat of Homer's battles, than that artificial manner of gaging his heroes by each other. Pope's Essay on Homer.

ECLE'CTICK. adj. [ἐκλεκτικός.] Selecting; chusing at will.

Cicero was of the eclectick sect, and chose out of each such positions as came nearest truth. Watts on the Mind.

ECLE'GMA. n. s. [ἔκ and λείχειν.] A form of medicine made by the incorporation of oils with syrups, and which is to be taken upon a liquorice stick. Quincy.

ECLI'PSE. n. s. [ἔκλειψις.]

1. An obscuration of the luminaries of heaven; the sun is eclipsed by the intervention of the moon; the moon by the interposition of the earth. The word originally signifies departure from the place, to which Milton alludes.

Sips of yew,
Sliver'd in the moon's eclipse. Shakesp. Macbeth.
Planets, planet-struck, real eclipse
Then suffer'd. Milton's Paradise Lost.
So though the sun victorious be,
And from a dark eclipse set free,
The influence, which we fondly fear,
Afflicts our thoughts the following year. Waller.
An eclipse of the moon is when the atmosphere of the earth, between the sun and the moon, hinders the light of the sun from falling upon and being reflected by the moon: if the light of the sun is kept off from the whole body of the moon, it is a total eclipse; if from a part only, it is a partial one. Locke.

2. Darkness; obscuration.

All the posterity of our first parents suffered a perpetual eclipse of spiritual life. Raleigh's Hist.
Experience we have of the vanity of human glory, in our scatterings and eclipses. King Charles.

To ECLIPSE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To darken a luminary.

Let the eclipsed moon her throne resign. Sandys.
Now if the earth were flat, the dark'ned moon
Would seem to all eclips'd as well as one. Creech.

2. To extinguish; to put out.

Then here I take my leave of thee, fair son,
Born to eclipse thy life this afternoon. Shak. H. VI.

3. To cloud; to obscure.

They had seen tokens of more than common greatness, howsoever now eclipsed with fortune. Sidney.
P'raise him to his father:—
—Let the prince's glory
Seem to eclipse, and cast a cloud on his. Denh. Sop.
Let other muses write his prosp'rous fate,
Of conquer'd nations tell, and kings restor'd;
But mine shall sing of his eclips'd estate,
Which, like the sun's, more wonders does afford.
Dryden.
He descended from his Father, and eclipsed the glory of his divine majesty with a veil of flesh. Calamy's Sermons.

4. To disgrace.

She told the king, that her husband was eclipsed in Ireland by the no-countenance his majesty had shewed towards him. Clarendon.
Another now hath to himself engross'd
All pow'r, and us eclips'd. Milton's Par. Lost.

ECLI'PTICK. n. s. [ἐκλειπτικὸς.] A great circle of the sphere, supposed to be drawn through the middle of the zodiack, and making an angle with the Equinoctial, in the points of Aries and Libra, of 23°. 30′. which is the sun's greatest declination. This is by some called via solis, or the way of the sun, because the sun, in his annual motion, never deviates from this line. This line is drawn on the globe: but in the new astronomy the Ecliptick is that path among the fixed stars, which the earth appears to describe to an eye placed in the sun, as in its annual motion it runs round the sun from West to East. If you suppose this circle to be divided into twelve equal parts, they will be the twelve signs. Harris.

All stars that have their distance from the Ecliptick northwards not more than twenty-three degrees and a half, may, in progression of time, have declination southward, and move beyond the equator. Brown's Vulg. Err.
The terraqueous globe had the same site and position, in respect of the sun, that it now hath. its axis was not parallel to that of the Ecliptick, but inclined in like manner as it is at present. Woodward's Nat. History.
You must conceive an imaginary plane, which passing through the centre of the sun and the earth, extends itself on all sides as far as the firmament: this plane is called the Ecliptick, and in this the centre of the earth is perpetually carried, without any deviation. Bentley.

ECLI'PTICK. adj. Described by the ecliptick line.

The earth's rotation makes the night and day;
The sun revolving through th' Ecliptick way,
Effects the various seasons of the year Blackmore.

E'CLOGUE. n. s. [ἐκλογή.] A pastoral poem, so called because Virgil called his pastorals eclogues.

What exclaiming praises Basilius gave this eclogue any man may guess, that knows love is better than spectacles to make every thing seem great. Sidney
It is not sufficient that the sentences be brief the whole eclogue should be so too. Pope.

ECO'NOMY. n. s. [οἰκονομία.] This word is often written, from its derivation, œconomy; but œ being no diphthong in English, it is placed here with the authorities for different orthography.]

1. The management of a family; the government of a household.

By St. Paul's economy the heir differs nothing from a servant, while he is in his minority; so a servant should differ nothing from a child in the substantial part. Taylor.

2. Distribution of expence.

Particular sums are not laid out to the greatest advantage in his economy; but are sometimes suffered to run waste, while he is only careful of the main. Dryden.

3. Frugality; discretion of expence; laudable parsimony.

I have no other notion of economy, than that it is the parent of liberty and ease. Swift to Bolingb.

4. Disposition of things; regulation.

All the divine and infinitely wise ways of economy that God could use towards a rational creature, oblige mankind to that course of living which is most agreeable to our nature. Hamm.

5. The disposition or arrangement of any work.

In the Greek poets, as in Plautus, we see the economy and disposition of poems better observed than in Terence Ben Jonson.
If this economy must be observed in the minutest parts of an epick poem, what soul, though sent into the world with great advantages of nature, cultivated with the liberal arts and sciences, can be sufficient to inform the body of so great a work? Dryden's Dedicat. to the Æneid.

System of matter; distribution of every thing active or passive to its proper place.

These the strainers aid,
That by a constant separation made,
They may a due economy maintain,
Exclude the noxious parts, the good retain. Blackm.

ECONO'MICK. ECONO'MICAL. adj. [from economy.]

1. Pertaining to the regulation of an household.

Her quick'ning pow'r in every living part,
Doth as a nurse, or as a mother serve;
And doth employ her economick art,
And busy care, her household to preserve. Davies.

In economical affairs, having proposed the government of a family, we consider the proper means to effect it. Watts.

2. Frugal.

Some are so plainly economical, as e'en to desire that the seat be well watered, and well swelled. Wotton's Architecture.

ECPHRA'CTICKS. n. s. [ἐκ and φράττω.] Such medicines as render rough humours more thin, so as to promote their discharge. Quincy.

Procure the blood a free course, ventilation, and transpiration, by suitable purges and ecphractick medicines. Harvey.

ECSTACY. n. s. [ἔκστασις.]

1. Any passion by which the thoughts are absorbed, and in which the mind is for a time lost.

Follow them swiftly,
And hinder them from what this ecstasy
May now provoke them to. Shakesp. Tempest.

'T may be
No longer joy there, but an ecstasy. Suckling.

Whether what we call ecstasy be not dreaming with our eyes open, I leave to be examined. Locke.

2. Excessive joy; rapture.

O love, be moderate! allay thy ecstasy! Shak.

The religious pleasure of a well-disposed mind moves gently, and therefore constantly: it does not affect by rapture and ecstasy; but is like the pleasure of health, still and sober. South.

Each delighted, and delighting, gives
The pleasing ecstasy which each receives. Prior.

A pleasure, which no language can express;
An ecstasy that mothers only feel,
Plays round my heart. Philips's Distrest Mother.

3. Enthusiasm; excessive elevation and absorption of the mind.

He lov'd me well, and oft would beg me sing;
Which when I did, he on the tender grass
Would sit, and hearken even to ecstasy. Milton.

4. Excessive grief or anxiety. This is not now used.

Sighs and groans, and shrieks that rend the air,
Are made, not mark'd; where violent sorrow seems
A modern ecstasy. Shakesp. Macbeth.

Better be with the dead,
Than on the torture of the mind to lie
In restless ecstasy. Shakesp. Macbeth.

5. Madness; distraction. This sense is not now in use.

Now see that noble and most sovereign reason,
Like sweet bells jangled out of tune, and harsh,
That unmatch'd form, and feature of blown youth,
Blasted with ecstasy. Shakesp. Hamlet.

E'CSTASIED. adj. [from ecstasy.] Ravished; filled with enthusiasm.

These are as common to the inanimate things as to the most ecstasied soul upon earth. Norris.

ECSTA'TICAL. ECSTA'TICK. adj. [ἐκστατικός.]

1. Ravished; rapturous; elevated beyond the usual bounds of nature.

There doth my soul in holy vision sit,
In pensive trance, and anguish, and ecstatick fit. Milton.

When one of them, after an ecstatical manner, fell down before an angel, he was severely rebuked, and bidden to worship God. Stilling fleet.

In trance ecstatick may thy pangs be drown'd;
Bright clouds descend, and angels watch thee round. Pope.

2. Raised to the highest degree of joy.

To gain Pescennius one employs his schemes;
One grasps a C ecrops in ecstatick dreams. Pope.

3. Tending to external objects. This sense is, I think, only to be found once, though agreeable enough to the derivation.

I find in me a great deal of ecstatical love, which continually carries me out to good without myself. Norris.

E'CTYPE. n. s. [ἔκτυπος.] A copy.

The complex ideas of substances are ectypes, copies, but not perfect ones; not adequate. Locke.

E'CURIE. n. s. [Fr. equus, Lat.] A place covered for the lodging or housing of horses.

EDA'CIOUS. adj. [edax, Lat.] Eating; voracious; devouring; predatory; ravenous; rapacious; greedy.

EDA'CITY. n. s. [edacitas, Lat.] Voracity; ravenousness; greediness; rapacity.

The wolf is a beast of great edacity, and digestion; it may be the parts of him comfort the bowels. Bacon.

To* E'DDER. v. a. [probably from edge.] To bind or interweave a fence. Not in use.

To add strength to the hedge, edder it; which is, bind the top of the stakes with some small long poles on each side. Mortimer's Husbandry.

E'DDER. n. s. [from the verb.] Such fencewood as is commonly put upon the top of fences. Not in use.

In lopping and felling, save edder and stake,
Thine hedges, as needeth, to mend or to make. Tusser.

E'DDY. n. s. [ed backward, again, and ea water, Sax.]

1. The water that by some repercussion, or opposite wind, runs contrary to the main stream.

My praises are as a bulrush upon a stream; if they sink not, 'tis because they are born up by the strength of the current, which supports their lightness; but they are carried round again, and return on the eddy where they first began. Dryden.

2. Whirlpool; circular motion.

The wild waves master'd him, and suck'd him in,
And smiling eddies dimpled on the main. Dryden.

So, where our wide Numidian wastes extend,
Sudden th' impetuous hurricanes descend,
Wheel through the air, in circling eddies play,
Tear up the sands, and sweep whole plains away. Addison's Cato.

E'DDY. adj. Whirling; moving circularly.

And chaff with eddy winds is whirl'd around,
And dancing leaves are lifted from the ground. Dryden's Virgil.

EDEMATO'SE. adj. [οἴδημα.] Swelling; full of humours: commonly written ordematous.

A serosity obstructing the glands may be watery, edematose, and schirrous, according to the viscosity of the humour. Arbuthnot.

EDE'NTATED. adj. [edentatus, Lat.] Deprived of teeth. Dict.

EDGE. n. s. [ecge, Sax.]

1. The thin or cutting part of a blade.

Seize upon Fife; give to the edge o' th' sword
His wife, his babes. Shakesp. Macbeth.

He that will a good edge win,
Must forge thick, and grind thin. Proverb.

The edge of war, like an ill-sheathed knife,
No more shall cut his master. Shakesp.

'Tis slander,
Whose edge is sharper than the sword. Shak. Cymb

2. A narrow part rising from a broader.

Some harrow their ground over, and then plow it upon an edge. Mortimer's Husbandry.

3. Brink; margin; extremity.

The rays which pass very near to the edges of any body, are bent a little by the action of the body. Newton's Opticks.

We have, for many years, walked upon the edge of a precipice, while nothing but the slender thread of human life has held us from sinking into endless misery. Rogers.

Yes, the last pen for freedom let me draw,
When truth stands trembling on the edge of law. Pope

4. Sharpness of mind; proper disposition for action or operation; intenseness of desire.

Give him a further edge,
And drive his purpose into these delights. Shakesp. Hamlet.

But when long time the wretches thoughts refin'd,
When want had set an edge upon their mind,
Then various cares their working thoughts employ'd,
And that which each invented, all enjoy'd. Creech's Manil.

Silence and solitude set an edge upon the genius, and cause a greater application. Dryd. Dufresnoy.

5. Keenness; acrimony of temper.

Abate the edge of traitors, gracious Lord!
That would reduce these bloody days again. Shakesp. Rich. III.

6. To set Teeth on Edge. To cause a tingling uneasiness in the teeth.

A harsh grating tune setteth the teeth on edge. Bac

To* EDGE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To sharpen; to enable to cut.

There sat she rolling her alluring eyes,
To edge her champion's sword, and urge my ruin. Dryden.

2. To furnish with an edge.

I fell'd along a man of bearded face,
His limbs all cover'd with a shining case;
So wond'rous hard, and so secure of wound,
It made my sword, though edg'd with flint, rebound. Dryden.

3. To border with any thing; to fringe.

Their long descending train,
With rubies edg'd, and sapphires, swept the plain. Dryden.

I rid over hanging hills, whose tops were edged with groves, and whose feet were watered with winding rivers. Pope.

4. To exasperate; to embitter.

By such reasonings the simple were blinded, and the malicious edged Hayward.

He was indigent and low in money, which perhaps might have a little edged his desperation. Wotton's Life of D. of Bucks.

5. To put forward beyond a line.

Edging by degrees their chairs forwards, they were in a little time got up close to one another. Locke.

To* EDGE. v. n. [perhaps ed backward, Sax.] To move forward against any power; going close upon a wind, as if upon its skirts or border, and so sailing slow.

I must edge upon a point of wind,
And make slow way. Dryden's Cleomenes.

E'DGED. participial adj. [from edge.] Sharp; not blunt.

We find that subtile or edge l quantities do prevail over blunt ones. Digby on Bodies.

E'DGING. n. s. [from edge.]

1. What is added to any thing by way of ornament.

The garland which I wove for you to wear,
And border'd with a rosy edging round. Dryden.
A woman branches out into a long dissertation upon the edging of a petticoat. Addison's Spect.

2. A narrow lace.

E'DGELESS. adj. [from edge.] Blunt; obtuse; unable to cut.

To-morrow in the battle think on me,
And fall thy edgeless sword; despair and die.
Shakesp. Rich. III.

They are edgeless weapons it hath to encounter. Decay of Piety.

E'DGETOOL. n. s. [edge and tool.] A tool made sharp to cut.

There must be no playing with things sacred, nor jesting with edgetools. L'Estrange.
Nurses from their children keep edgetools. Dorset.
I shall exercise upon steel, and its several sorts; and what sort is fittest for edgetools, which for springs. Moxon.

E'DGEWISE. adv. [edge and wise.] With the edge put into any particular direction.

Should the flat side be objected to the stream, it would be soon turned edgewise by the force of it. Ray.

E'DIBLE. adj. [from edo, Lat.] Fit to be eaten; fit for food.

Some flesh is not edible, as horses and dogs. Bac.
Wheat and barley, and the like, are made either edible or potable by man's art and industry. More against Atheism.
Some of the fungus kind, gathered for edible mushrooms, have produced a difficulty of breathing. Arbuthnot.
The edible creation decks the board. Prior.

E'DICT. n. s. [edictum, Lat.] A proclamation or command of prohibition; a law promulgated.

When an absolute monarch commandeth his subjects that which seemeth good in his own discretion, hath not his edict the force of a law? Hooker.

The great King of kings,
Hath in the table of his law commanded
That thou shalt do no murder; will you then
Spurn at his edict, and fulfil a man's?
Shakesp. Rich. III.

Severe decrees may keep our tongues in awe,
But to our thoughts what edict can give law?
Dryden.

The ministers are always preaching, and the governours putting out edicts against gaming and fine cloaths. Addison.

EDIFICA'TION. n. s. [edificatio, Lat.]

1. The act of building up man in the faith; improvement in holiness.

Our blessed Saviour told us, that we must account for every idle word, not meaning that every word not designed for edification, or less prudent, shall be reckoned for a sin. Taylor.

2. Improvement; instruction.

Out of these magazines I shall supply the town with what may tend to their edification. Addison's Guardian.

E'DIFICE. n. s. [ædificium, Lat.] A fabrick; a building; a structure.

My love was like a fair house built on another man's ground; so that I have lost my edifice by mistaking the place where I erected it. Shakesp. Merry Wives of Windsor.

God built
So spacious, and his line stretch'd out so far,
That man may know he dwells not in his own;
An edifice too large for him to fill. Milton.

The edifice, where all were met to see him,
Upon their heads and on his own he pull'd. Milt.

As Tuscan pillars owe their original to this country, the architects always give them a place in edifices raised in Tuscany. Addison on Italy.

He must be an idiot that cannot discern more strokes of workmanship in the structure of an animal than in the most elegant edifice. Bentley.

EDIFI'ER. n. s. [from edify.] One that improves or instructs another.

To EDIFY. v. a. [edifico, Lat.]

1. To build.

There was a holy chapel edify'd,
Wherein the hermit wont to say
His holy things each morn and eventide. Spenser.

Men have edify'd
A lofty temple, and perfum'd an altar to thy name. Chapm.

2. To instruct; to improve.

He who speaketh no more than edifieth, is undeservedly reprehended for much speaking. Hooker.
Men are edified when either their understanding is taught somewhat whereof, in such actions, it behoveth all men to consider, or when their hearts are moved with any affection suitable thereunto. Hooker.
Life is no life, without the blessing of a friendly and an edifying conversation. L'Estrange.
He gave, he taught; and edify'd the more,
Because he shew'd, by proof, 'twas easy to be poor. Dryden.

3. To teach; to persuade. This is now either obsolete or ludicrous.

You shall hardly edify me, that those nations might not, by the law of nature, have been subdued by any nation that had only policy and moral virtue. Bacon's Holy War.

E'DILE. n. s. [ædilis, Lat.] The title of a magistrate in old Rome, whose office seems in some particulars to have resembled that of our justices of peace.

The edile, ho! let him be apprehended. Shak.

EDI'TION. n. s. [editio, Lat.]

1. Publication of any thing, particularly of a book.

This English edition is not so properly a translation, as a new composition upon the same ground. Burnet.

2. Republication; generally with some revisal or correcting.

These are of the second edition. Shakesp.
The business of our redemption is to rub over the defaced copy of the creation, to reprint God's image upon the soul, and to set forth nature in a second and a fairer edition. South.
I cannot go so far as he who published the last edition of him. Dryden's Fables, Preface.
The Code, composed hastily, was forced to undergo an emendation, and to come forth in a second edition. Baker.

E'DITOR. n. s. [editor, Lat.] Publisher; he that revises or prepares any work for publication.

When a different reading gives us a different sense, or a new elegance in an author, the editor does very well in taking notice of it. Addis. Spect.
This nonsense got into all the editions by a mistake of the stage editors. Pope's Notes on Shakesp.

To E'DUCATE. v. a. [duco, Lat.] To breed; to bring up; to instruct youth.

Their young succession all their cares employ;
They breed, they brood, instruct and educate,
And make provision for the future state. Dryd. Vir.
Education is worse, in proportion to the grandeur of the parents: if the whole world were under one monarch, the heir of that monarch would be the worst educated mortal since the creation. Swift on Modern Education.

EDUCA'TION. n. s. [from educate.] Formation of manners in youth; the manner of breeding youth; nurture.

Education and instruction are the means, the one by use, the other by precept, to make our natural faculty of reason both the better and the sooner to judge rightly between truth and error, good and evil. Hooker.
All nations have agreed in the necessity of a strict education, which consisted in the observance of moral duties. Swift.

To EDU'CE. v. a. [educo, Lat.] To bring out: to extract; to produce from a state of occultation.

That the world was educed out of the power of space, give that as a reason of its original: in this language, to grow rich, were to educe money out of the power of the pocket. Glanville.
This matter must have lain eternally confined to its beds of earth, were there not this agent to educe it thence. Woodward.
Th' eternal art educes good from ill,
Grafts on this passion our best principle. Pope.

EDU'CTION. n. s. [from educe.] The act of bringing any thing into view.

To EDU'LCORATE. v. a. [from dulcis, Lat.] To sweeten; a chymical term.

2. To make no more legible or visible; to blot out; to strike out.

Characters on dust, the first breath of wind effaces. Locke.
It was ordered, that his name should be effaced out of all publick registers. Addison on Italy
Time, I said, may happily efface
That cruel image of the king's disgrace. Prior.
Otway fail'd to polish or refine,
And fluent Shakespeare scarce effac'd a line. Pope.

3. To destroy; to wear away.

Nor our admission shall your realm disgrace,
Nor length of time our gratitude efface. Dryd. Æn.

EFFE'CT. n. s. [effectus, Lat.]

1. That which is produced by an operating cause.

You may see by her example, in herself wise, and of others beloved, that neither folly is the cause of vehement love, nor reproach the effect. Sidney.
Effect is the substance produced, or simple idea introduced into any subject, by the exerting of power. Locke.
We see the pernicious effects of luxury in the ancient Romans, who immediately found themselves poor as soon as this vice got footing among them. Addison on Italy.

2. Consequence; event.

No man, in effect, doth accompany with others, but he learneth, ere he is aware, some gesture, or voice, or fashion. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
To say of a celebrated piece that there are faults in it, is, in effect, to say that the author of it is a man. Addison.

3. Purpose; meaning; general intent.

They spake to her to that effect. 2 Chron.

4. Consequence intended; success; advantage.

Christ is become of no effect unto you. Gal. v. 4.

The institution has hitherto proved without effect, and has neither extinguished crimes, nor lessened the numbers of criminals. Temple.

5. Completion; perfection.

Not so worthily to be brought to heroical effect by fortune or necessity, like Ulysses and Æneas, as by one's own choice and working. Sidney.

Semblant art shall carve the fair effect,
And full atchievement of thy great designs. Prior.

6. Reality; not mere appearance.

In shew, a marvellous indifferently composed senate ecclesiastical was to govern, but in effect one only man should, as the spirit and soul of the residue, do all in all. Hooker.

State and wealth, the business and the crowd,
Seems at this distance but a darker cloud;
And is to him, who rightly things esteems,
No other in effect than what it seems. Denham.

7. [In the plural.] Goods; moveables.

What form of prayer
Can serve my turn? Forgive me my foul murther!
That cannot be, since I am still possest
Of those effects for which I did the murther,
My crown, mine own ambition, and my queen.
Shakesp.

The emperor knew that they could not convey away many of their effects. Addison's Spectator.

To EFFE'CT. v. a. [efficio, Lat.]

1. To bring to pass; to attempt with success; to atchieve; to accomplish as an agent.

Being consul, I doubt not t' effect
All that you wish. Ben Jonson.

EFFE'CTIBLE. adj. [from effect.] Performable; practicable; feasible.

That a pot full of ashes will still contain as much water as it would without them, is not effectible upon the strictest experiment. Brown's Vulg. Err.

EFFE'CTIVE. adj. [from effect.]

1. Having the power to produce effects; efficacious; effectual: with of.

They are not effective of any thing, nor leave no work behind them. Bacon.

If any mystery, rite, or sacrament be effective of any spiritual blessings, then this much more, as having the prerogative and principality above every thing else. Taylor.

There is nothing in words and stiles but suitableness, that makes them acceptable and effective Glanville.

2. Operative; active; having the quality of producing effects.

Nor do they speak properly who say that time consumeth all things; for time is not effective, nor are bodies destroyed by it. Brown's Vulg. Errours.

3. Producing effects; efficient.

Whosoever is an effective real cause of doing his neighbour wrong is criminal, by what instrument soever he does it. Taylor.

4. Having the power of operation; useful: as, effective men in an army.

EFFE'CTIVELY. adv. [from effective.] Powerfully; with real operation.

This effectively resists the devil, and suffers us to receive no hurt from him. Taylor's Rule of Liv. Holy.

EFFE'CTLESS. adj. [from effect.] Without effect; impotent; useless; unmeaning.

I'll chop off my hands;
In bootless prayer have they been held up,
And they have serv'd me to effectless use. Shakesp.

EFFE'CTOR. n. s. [effector, Lat.]

1. He that produces any effect; performer.

2. Maker; Creator.

We commemorate the creation, and pay worship to that infinite Being who was the effector of it. Derham.

EFFE'CTUAL. adj. [effectuel, Fr.]

1. Productive of effects; powerful to a degree adequate to the occasion; operative; efficacious.

The reading of scripture is effectual, as well to lay even the first foundation, as to add degrees of farther perfection, in the fear of God. Hooker.

The communication of thy faith may become effectual, by the acknowledging of every good thing. Philem. 6.

2. Veracious; expressive of facts. A sense not in use.

Reprove my allegation, if you can;
Or else conclude my words effectual. Shakesp.

EFFE'CTUALLY. adv. [from effectual.] In a manner productive of the consequence intended; efficaciously.

Sometimes the sight of the altar, and decent preparations for devotion, may compose and recover the wandering mind more effectually than a sermon. South.

A subject of that vast latitude, that the strength of one man will scarcely be sufficient effectually to carry it on. Woodward.

To EFFE'CTUATE. v. a. [effectuer, Fr.] To bring to pass; to fulfil.

He found means to acquaint himself with a nobleman, to whom discovering what he was, he found him a fit instrument to effectuate his desire. Sidney.

EFFE'MINACY. n. s. [from effeminate.]

1. Admission of the qualities of a woman; softness; unmanly delicacy; mean submission.

But foul effeminacy held me yok'd
Her bond slave: O indignity, O blot
To honour and religion! Milton's Agonistes.

2. Lasciviousness; loose pleasure.

So long as idleness is quite shut out from our lives, all the sins of wantonness, softness, and effeminacy are prevented. Taylor.

EFFE'MINATE. adj. [effeminatus, Lat.]

1. Having the qualities of a woman; womanish; soft to an unmanly degree; voluptuous; tender; luxurious: of persons.

The king, by his voluptuous life and mean marriage, became effeminate, and less sensible of honour. Bacon.

2. Resembling the practice of a woman; womanish: of things.

After the slaughter of so many peers,
Shall we at last conclude effeminate peace? Shakesp.
From man's effeminate slackness it begins,
Who should better hold his place. Milton.
The more effeminate and soft his life,
The more his fame to struggle to the field. Dryd.

3. Womanlike; soft without reproach. A sense not in use.

As well we know your tenderness of heart,
And gentle, kind, effeminate remorse. Shakesp.

To EFFE'MINATE. v. a. [effemino, Lat.] To make womanish; to weaken; to emasculate; to unman.

When one is sure it will not corrupt or effeminate children's minds, and make them fond of trifles, I think all things should be contrived to their satisfaction. Locke.

To EFFE'MINATE. v. n. To grow womanish; to soften; to melt into weakness.

In a slothful peace both courage will effeminate and manners corrupt. Pope.

EFFEMINA'TION. n. s. [from effeminate.] The state of one grown womanish; the state of one emasculated or unmanned.

Vices the hare figured; not only feneration, or usury, from its fecundity and superfetation, but degenerate effemination. Brown's Vulg. Err.

To EFFERVE'SCE. v. n. [effervesco, Lat.] To generate heat by intestine motion.

The compound spirit of nitre, put to oil of cloves, will effervesce even to a flame.
Mead on Poisons.

EFFERVE'SCENCE. n. s. [from effervco, Lat.] The act of growing hot; production of heat by intestine motion.

In the chymical sense, effervescence signifies an intestine motion, produced by mixing two bodies together that lay at rest before; attended sometimes with a hissing noise, frothing, and ebullition. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

Take chalk, ignite it in a crucible, and then powder it: put it into strong spirit of nitre, 'till it becomes sweetish, and makes no effervescence upon the injection of the chalk. Grew.

Hot springs do not owe their heat to any colluctation or effervescence of the minerals in them, but to subterranean heat or fire. Woodw. Nat. Hist.

EFFE'TE. adj. [effatus, Lat.]

1. Barren; disabled from generation.

It is probable that females have in them the seeds of all the young they will afterwards bring forth, which, all spent and exhausted, the animal becomes barren and effete. Ray.

In most countries the earth would be so parched and effete by the drought, that it would afford but one harvest. Bentley.

2. Worn out with age.

All that can be allowed him now, is to refresh his decrepit, effete sensuality, with the history of his former life. South.

EFFICA'CIOUS. adj. [efficax, Lat.] Productive of effects; powerful to produce the consequence intended.

A glowing drop with hollow'd steel
He takes, and, by one efficacious breath,
Dilates to cube or square. Philips.

EFFICA'CIOUSLY. adv. [from efficacious.] Effectually; in such a manner as to produce the consequence desired.

If we find that any other body strikes efficaciously enough upon it, we cannot doubt but it will move that way in which the striking body impels it. Digby on Bodies.

E'FFICACY. n. s [from efficax, Lat.] Power to produce effects; production of the consequence intended.

Whatsoever is spoken concerning the efficacy or necessity of God's word, they tie and restrain only into sermons. Hooker.

Whether if they had tasted the tree of life before that of good and evil, they had suffered the curse of mortality; or whether the efficacy of the one had not overpowered the penalty of the other, we leave it unto God. Brown.

Efficacy is a power of speech which represents a thing, by presenting to our minds the lively ideas or forms. Peacham.

The apostle tells us of the success and efficacy of the Gospel upon the minds of men; and, for this reason, he calls it the power of God unto salvation. Tillotson.

The arguments drawn from the goodness of God, have a prevailing efficacy to induce men to repent. Rogers.

EFFI'CIENCE. } n. s. [from efficio, Lat.]
EFFI'CIENCY. } The act of producing effects; agency.

The manner of this divine efficiency being far above us, we are no more able to conceive by our reason, than creatures unreasonable by their sense are able to apprehend after what manner we dispose and order the course of our affairs. Hooker.

That they are carried by the manuduction of a rule, is evident; but what that regulating efficiency should be, is not easily determined. Glanville.

Sinning against conscience has no special productive efficiency of this particular sort of sinning, more than of any other. South.

A pious will is the means to enlighten the understanding in the truth of Christianity, upon the account of a natural efficiency: a will so disposed, will engage the mind in a severe search. South.

Gravity does not proceed from the efficiency of any contingent and unstable agents; being entirely owing to the direct concourse of the power of the Author of nature. Woodward.

EFFI'CIENT. n. s. [efficio, Lat.]

1. The cause which makes effects to be what they are.

God, which moveth meer natural agents as an efficient only, doth otherwise move intellectual creatures, and especially his holy angels. Hooker.

2. He that makes; the effector.

Observations of the order of nature carry the mind up to the admiration of the great efficient of the world. Hale.

EFFI'CIENT. adj. Causing effects; that makes the effect to be what it is.

Your answering in the final cause, makes me believe you are at a loss for the efficient. Collier on Thought.

To EFFI'GIATE. v. a. [effigio, Lat.] To form in semblance; to image.

EFFIGIA'TION. n. s. [from effigiate.] The act of imaging; or forming the resemblance of things or persons. Dict.

EFFI'GIES. } n. s. [effigies, Lat. effigy is E'FFIGY. } from being in effigy.] Resemblance; image in painting or sculpture; representation; idea.

We behold the species of eloquence in our minds, the effigies or actual image of which we seek in the organs of our hearing. Dryden's Dufresnoy, Pref.

Observe those numerous wrongs in effigy,
The gods have sav'd from the devouring sea. Garth.

EFFLORE'SCENCE. }
EFFLORE'SCENCY. } n. s. [effloresco, Lat.]

1. Production of flowers.

Where there is less heat, there the spirit of the plant is digested, and severed from the grosser juice in efflorescence. Bacon.

2. Excrescencies in the form of flowers.

Two white sparry incrustations, with efflorescencies in form of shrubs, formed by the trickling of water. Woodward.

3. [In physick.] The breaking out of some humours in the skin, in distempers called exanthematous; as in the measles, and the like. Quincy.

A wart beginneth in the cutis, and seemeth to be an efflorescence of the serum of the blood. Wiseman's Surgery.

EFFLORE'SCENT. adj. [effloresco, Lat.] Shooting out in form of flowers.

Yellow efflorescent sparry incrustations on stone. Woodward.

EFFLU'ENCE. n. s. [effluo, Lat.] That which issues from some other principle.

Bright effluence of bright essence increate. Milt.

These scintillations are not the ascension of the air upon the collision of two hard bodies, but rather the inflammable effluences discharged from the baches collided. Brown.

From the bright effluence of his deed
They borrow that reflected light,
With which the lasting lamp they feed,
Whose beams dispel the damps of envious night. Prior.

EFFLU'VIA. } n. s. [from effluo, Lat.]
EFFLU'VIUM. } Those small particles which are continually flying off from bodies; the subtilty of which appears from their being able, a long time together, to produce very sensible effects, without any sensible diminution of the body from whence they arise. Quincy.

If the earth were an electrick body, and the air but the effluvium thereof, we might believe that from attraction, and by effluxion, bodies tended to the earth. Brown.

Neither the earth's diurnal revolution upon its axis, nor any magnetick effluvia of the earth, nor the air, or atmosphere which environs the earth, can produce gravity. Woodward.

If these effluvia, which do upward tend,
Because less heavy than the air, ascend;
Why do they ever from their height retreat,
And why return to seek their central seat? Blackm.

EFFLUX. n. s. [efluxus, Lat.]

1. The act of flowing out.

Through the copious efflux of matter through the orifice of a deep ulcer, he was reduced to a skeleton. Harvey.

2. Effusion; flow.

The first efflux of men's piety, after receiving of the faith, was the selling and consecrating their possessions. Hammond.

3. That which flows from something else; emanation.

Prime chearer, light!
Of all material beings, first and best!
Efflux divine! Thomson's Summer.

4. The act of flowing is more properly effluence, and that which flows more properly efflux.

To EFFLU'X. v. n. [effluo, Lat.] To run out; to flow away. This is not often in use.

Five thousand and some odd centuries of years are effluxed since the creation. Boyle's Seraph. Love.

EFFLU'XION. n. s. [efluxum, Lat.]

1. The act of flowing out.

By effluxion and attraction bodies tend towards the earth. Brown.

2. That which flows out; effluvium; emanation.

There are some light effluxions from spirit to spirit, when men are one with another; as from body to body. Bacon.

To EFFO'RCE. v. a. [efforcer, Fr.]

1. To force; to break through by violence.

In all that room was nothing to be seen,
But huge great iron chests and coffers strong,
All barr'd with double bonds, that ne'er could ween
Them to efforce by violence or wrong. Fairy Qu.

2. To force; to ravish; to violate by force.

Then 'gan her beauty shine as brightest sky,
And burnt his beastly heart t' efforce her chastity. Spenser.

3. To strain; to exert with effort or vehemence. This word is not now used.

The palmer lent his ear into the noise,
To wheet who called so importunely;
Again he heard a more efforced voice,
That bad him come in haste. Spenser.

To EFFO'RM. v. a. [efformo, Lat.] To make in any certain manner; to shape; to fashion.

Merciful and gracious, thou gavest us being, raising us from nothing, and efforming us after thy own image. Taylor.

EFFORMA'TION. n. s. [from efform.] The act of fashioning or giving form to.

Nature begins to set upon her work of efformation. More.

They pretend to solve phænomena, and to give an account of the production and efformation of the universe. Ray.

E'FFORT. n. s. [effort, Fr.] Struggle; strain; vehement action; laborious endeavour.

If, after having gained victories, we had made the same efforts as if we had lost them, France could not have withstood us. Addison on the State of the War.

Though the same sun, with all diffusive rays,
Blush in the rose, and in the diamond blaze,
We prize the stronger effort of his pow'r,
And always set the gem above the flow'r. Pope.

EFFO'SSION. n. s. [effodio, Lat.] The act of digging up from the ground; deterration.

He set apart annual sums for the recovery of manuscripts, the effossion of coins, and the procuring of mummies. Arbuthnot.

EFFRA'IABLE. adj. [effroyable, Fr.] Dreadful; frightful; terrible. A word not used.

Pestilential symptoms declare nothing a proportionate efficient of their effraiable nature but arsenical fumes. Harvey.

EFFRO'NTERY. n. s. [effronterie, Fr.] Impudence; shamelessness; contempt of reproach.

They could hardly contain themselves within one unworthy act, who had effrontery enough to commit or countenance it. King Charles.

Others with ignorance and insufficiency have self-admiration and effrontery to set up themselves. Watts.

A bold man's effrontery, in company with women, must be owing to his low opinion of them, and his high one of himself. Clarissa.

To EFFU'LGE. v. n. [effulgeo, Lat.] To send forth lustre or effulgence. I know not that this word is used.

The topaz charms the sight,
Like these effulging yellow streams of light. Savage.

EFFU'LGENCE. n. s. [effulgeo, Lat.] Lustre; brightness; clarity; splendour.

On thee
Impress'd, th' effulgence of his glory abides. Milt.
Thy lustre, blest effulgence, can dispel
The clouds of error, and the gloom of hell. Blackm.

EFFU'LGENT. adj. [effulgens, Lat.] Shining; bright; luminous.

How soon th' effulgent emanations fly
Through the blue gulph of interposing sky! Blackm.
The downward sun
Looks out effulgent, from amid' the flash
Of broken clouds. Thomson's Spring.

EFFUMABI'LITY. n. s. [fumus, Lat.] The quality of flying away, or vapouring in fumes. An useful word, but not adopted.

They seem to define mercury by volatility, or, if I may coin such a word, effumability. Boyle.

To EFFU'SE. v. a. [effusus, Lat.] To pour out; to spill; to shed.

He fell, and, deadly pale,
Groan'd out his soul, with gushing blood effus'd. Milton.

At last emerging from his nostrils wide,
And gushing mouth, effus'd the briny tide. Pope's Odyssey.

EFFU'SE. n. s. [from the verb.] Waste; effusion. Not used.

The air hath got into my deadly wounds,
And much effuse of blood doth make me faint. Shakesp.

EFFU'SION. n. s. [effusio, Lat.]

1. The act of pouring out.

My heart hath melted at a lady's tears,
Being an ordinary inundation;
But this effusion of such manly drops,
This show'r, blown up by tempest of the soul,
Startles mine eyes, and makes me more amas'd. Shakesp.

Our blessed Lord commanded the representation of his death, and sacrifice on the cross, should be made by breaking bread and effusion of wine. Taylor's Worthy Communicant.

If the flood-gates of heaven were any thing distinct from the forty days rain, their effusion, 'tis likely, was at this same time when the abyss was broken open. Burnet's Theory.

2. Waste; the act of spilling or shedding.

When there was but as yet one only family in the world, no means of instruction, human or divine, could prevent effusion of blood. Hooker.

Stop effusion of our Christian blood,
And 'stablish quietness. Shakesp. Henry VI.

Yet shall she be restor'd, since publick good
For private int'rest ought not be withstood,
To save th' effusion of my people's blood.
Dryden's Homer.

3. The act of pouring out words.

Endless and senseless effusions of indigested prayers, oftentimes disgrace, in most unsufferable manner, the worthiest part of Christian duty towards God. Hooker.

4. Bounteous donation.

Such great force the gospel of Christ had then upon men's souls, melting them into that liberal effusion of all that they had. Hamm. on Fundam.

5. The thing poured out.

Purge me with the blood of my Redeemer, and I shall be clean; wash me with that precious effusion, and I shall be whiter than snow. K. Charles.

EFFU'SIVE. adj. [from effuse.] Pouring out; dispersing.

The North-east spends its rage; th' effusive South
Warms the wide air Thomson's Spring

EFT. n. s. [ɛɸeta, Sax.] A newt; an evet; a small kind of lizard that lives generally in the water.

Peacocks are beneficial to the places where they are kept, by clearing of them from snakes, adders, and efts, upon which they will live. Mortim. Husb.

The crocodile of Egypt is the lizard of Italy, and the eft in our country. Nicholas

EFT. adv. [ɛft, Sax.] Soon; quickly; speedily; shortly. Obsolete.

Eft through the thick they heard one rudely rush,
With noise whereof he from his lofty steed
Down fell to ground, and crept into a bush,
To hide his coward head from dying dread.
Fairy Queen.

Quite consumed with flame,
The idol is of that eternal maid,
For so at least I have preserv'd the same,
With hands profane, from being eft betray'd.
Fanfax.

E'FTSOONS. adv. [ɛft and ʒoon.] Soon afterwards; in a short time; again. An obsolete word; formed, as it seems, by the conjunction of two words of the same meaning.

He in their stead eftsoons placed Englishmen, who possessed all their lands. Spenser's State of Ireland.

Eftsoons the nymphs, which now had flowers their fill,
Run all in haste to see that silver brood. Spenser

The Germans deadly hated the Turks, whereof it was to be thought that new wars should eftsoons ensue. Knolles's History.

Eftsoons, O sweetheart kind, my love repay,
And all the year shall then be holiday. Gay's Past

E. G. [exempli gratia.] For the sake of an instance or example.

E'GER. n. s. [See EAGER.] An impetuous or irregular flood or tide.

From the peculiar disposition of the earth at the bottom, wherein quick excitations are made, may arise those egers and flows in some estuaries and rivers; as is observable about Trent and Humber in England. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

To EGE'ST. v. a. [egero, Lat.] To throw out food at the natural vents.

Divers creatures sleep all the Winter; as the bear, the hedge-hog, the bat, and the bee; these all wax fat when they sleep, and egest not. Bacon's Natural History.

EGE'STION. n. s. [egestus, Lat.] The act of throwing out the digested food at the natural vents.

The animal soul or spirits manage as well their spontaneous actions as the natural or involuntary exertions of digestion, egestion, and circulation. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

EGG. n. s. [æg, Sax. ough, Erse.]

1. That which is laid by feathered and some other animals, from which their young is produced.

An egg was found having lain many years at the bottom of a moat, where the earth had somewhat overgrown it; and this egg was come to the hardness of a stone, and the colours of the white and yolk perfect. Bacon.

Eggs are perhaps the highest, most nourishing, and exalted of animal food, and most indigestible. Arbuthnot.

2. The spawn or sperm of other creatures.

Therefore think him as the serpent's egg,
Which hatch'd, would, as his kind, grow mischievous. Shakesp.

Ev'ry insect of each different kind,
In its own egg, chear'd by the solar rays,
Organs involv'd and latent life displays. Blackm.

3. Any thing fashioned in the shape of an egg.

There was taken a great glass-bubble with a long neck, such as chemists are wont to call a philosophical egg. Boyle.

To EGG. v. a. [eggia to incite, Islandick; eggian, Sax.] To incite; to instigate; to provoke to action: for this, edge is, I think, sometimes ignorantly used.

Study becomes pleasant to him who is pursuing his genius, and whose ardour of inclination eggs him forward, and carrieth him through every obstacle. Derham's Physico-Theology.

E'GLANTINE. n. s. [esglantier, Fr.] A species of rose; sweet-briar.

O'er-canopied with luscious woodbine,
With sweet musk roses, and with eglantine. Shak.

The leaf of eglantine, not to slander,
Out-sweeten'd not thy breath. Shakesp. Cym.

Sweet roses with eglantine were spread,
A hedge about the sides, a covering over head.
Dryd.

E'GOTISM. n. s. [from ego, Lat.] The fault committed in writing by the frequent repetition of the word ego or I; too frequent mention of a man's self in writing or conversation.

The most violent egotism which I have met with, in the course of my reading, is that of Cardinal Wolsey's; ego & rex meus, I and my king. Spect.

E'GOTIST. n. s. [from ego.] One that is always repeating the word ego, I; a talker of himself.

A tribe of egotists, for whom I have always had a mortal aversion, are the authors of memoirs, who are never mentioned in any works but their own. Spectator.

To E'GOTIZE. v. n. [from ego.] To talk much of one's self.

EGRE'GIOUS. adj. [egregius, Lat.]

1. Eminent; remarkable; extraordinary.

He might be able to adorn this present age, and furnish history with the records of egregious exploits both of art and valour. Moore against Atheism.

One to empire born;
Egregious prince; whose manly childhood shew'd
His mingled parents, and portended joy
Unspeakable. Phillips.

An egregious and pregnant instance how far virtue surpasses ingenuity. Woodward.

2. Eminently bad; remarkably vicious. This is the usual sense.

We may be bold to conclude, that these last times, for insolence, pride, and egregious contempt of all good order, are the worst. Hooker's Preface

Ah me, most credulous fool!
Egregious murtherer! Shakesp. Cymbeline.

And hence th' egregious wizzard shall foredoom
The fate of Louis and the fall of Rome. Pope.

EGRE'GIOUSLY. adv. [from egregious.] Eminently; shamefully.

Make the Moor thank me, love me, and reward me,
For making him egregiously an ass,
And practising upon his peace and quiet,
Even to madness. Shakesp. Othello.

He discovered that, besides the extravagance of every article, he had been egregiously cheated. Arbuthnot's John Bull.

E'GRESS. n. s. [egressus, Lat.] The power or act of going out of any place; departure.

Gates of burning adamant,
Barr'd over us, prohibit all egress. Milton.

This water would have been locked up within the earth, and its egress utterly debarred, had the strata of stone and marble remained continuous. Woodward's Nat. Hist.

EGRE'SSION. n. s. [egressio, Lat.] The act of going out.

The vast number of troops is expressed in the swarms; their tumultuous manner of issuing out of their ships, and the perpetual egression, which seemed without end, are imaged in the bees pouring out. Pope.

E'GRET. n. s. A fowl of the heron kind, with red legs. Bailey.

E'GRIOT. n. s. [aigret, Fr. perhaps from aigre sour.] A species of cherry.

To EJA'CULATE. v. a. [ejaculor, Lat.] To throw; to shoot; to dart out.

Being rooted so little way in the skin, nothing near so deeply as the quills of fowls, they are the more easily ejaculated. Grew's Museum.

The mighty magnet from the center darts
This strong, though subtile force, through all the parts:
Its active rays, ejaculated thence,
Irradiate all the wide circumference. Blackmore.

EJACULA'TION. n. s. [from ejaculate.]

1. The act of darting or throwing out.

There seemeth to be acknowledged, in the act of envy, an ejaculation or irradiation of the eye. Bacon's Essays.

There is to be observed, in those dissolutions which will not easily incorparate, what the effects are; as the ebullition, the precipitation to the bottom, the ejaculation towards the top, the suspension in the midst, and the like. Bacon.

2. A short prayer darted out occasionally, without solemn retirement.

In your dressing let there be ejaculations fitted to the several actions of dressing; as at washing your hands pray God to cleanse your soul from sin. Taylor's Guide to Devotion.

EJA'CULATORY. adj. [from ejaculate.]

1. Suddenly darted out; uttered in short sentences.

The continuance of this posture might incline to ease and drowsiness; they used it rather upon some short ejaculatory prayers, than in their larger devotions. Duppa's Devotion.

2. Sudden; hasty.

We are not to value ourselves upon the merit of ejaculatory repentances, that take us by fits and starts. L'Estrange.

To EJE'CT. v. a. [ejicio, ejectum, Lat.]

1. To throw out; to cast forth; to void.

Infernal lightning sallies from his throat!
Ejected sparks upon the billows float! Sandys.
The heart, as said, from its contracted cave,
On the left side ejects the bounding wave. Blackm.
Tears may spoil the eyes, but not wash away the afflictiou; sighs may exhaust the man, but not eject the burthen. South.

2. To throw out or expel from an office or possession.

It was the force of conquest; force with force
Is well ejected, when the conquer'd can. Milton.
The French king was again ejected when our king submitted to the church. Dryden.

3. To expel; to drive away; to dismiss with hatred.

We are peremptory to dispatch
This viperous traitor; to eject him hence,
Were but our danger; and to keep him here,
Our certain death; therefore it is decreed
He dies to-night. Shakesp. Coriolanus.

4. To cast away; to reject.

To have ejected whatsoever the church doth make account of, be it never so harmless in itself, and of never so ancient continuance, without any other crime to charge it with, than only that it hath been the hap thereof to be used by the church of Rome, and not to be commanded in the word of God, could not have been defended. Hooker.
Will any man say, that if the words whoring and drinking were by parliament ejected out of the English tongue, we should all awake next morning chaste and temperate. Swift.

EJE'CTION. n. s. [ejectio, Lat.]

1. The act of casting out; expulsion.

These stories are founded on the ejection of the fallen angels from heaven. Broome.

This island contains eight score and eight miles in circuit. Sandy's Journey.

EIGHTH. adj. [from eight.] Next in order to the seventh; the ordinal of eight.

Another yet?—A seventh! I'll see no more;
And yet the eighth appears! Shakesp. Macbeth.
In the eighth month should be the reign of Saturn. Bacon.
I stay reluctant seven continued years,
And water her ambrosial couch with tears;
The eighth she voluntarily moves to part,
Or urg'd by Jove, or her own changeful heart.
Pope.

EI'GHTEEN. adj. [eight and ten.] Twice nine.

He can't take two from twenty, for his heart,
And leave eighteen. Shakesp. Cymbeline.
If men naturally lived but twenty years, we should be satisfied if they died about eighteen; and yet eighteen years now are as long as eighteen years would be then. Taylor.

EI'GHTEENTH. adj. [from eighteen.] The next in order to the seventeenth; twice ninth.

In the eighteenth year of Jeroboam died Abijam. 1 Kings.

Wilkins's Math. Magic.

EI'GHTSCORE. adv. [eight and score.] Eight times twenty; an hundred and sixty.

What! keep a week away? seven days and nights?
Eightscore eight hours? and lovers absent hours,
More tedious than the dial eightscore times?
Oh weary reckoning! Shakesp. Othello.

EI'GHTY. adj. [eight and ten.] Eight times ten; fourscore.

Eighty odd years of sorrow have I seen,
And each hour's joy wreck'd with a week of teen.
Shakesp.
Among all other climactericks three are most remarkable; that is, seven times seven, or forty-nine; nine times nine, or eighty one; and seven times nine, or the year sixty-three, which is conceived to carry with it the most considerable fatality. Brown's Vulg. Err.

EIGNE. adj. [aisne, Fr.] [In law.] Denotes the eldest or first born. Here it signifies unalienable, as being entailed.

It happeneth not seldom, that, to avoid the yearly oath, for averment of the continuance of some estate for life, which is eigne, and not subject to forfeiture for the alienation that cometh after it, the party will offer to sue for a pardon uncompelled before the time; in all which, some mitigation of the uttermost value may well and worthily be offered. Bacon.

EI'SEL. n. s. [eorɪl, Sax.] Vinegar, verjuice; any acid. An old word.

Cast in thy mind
How thou resemblest Christ, as with sowre poison,
If thou paine thy taste; remember therewithall,
How Christ for thee tasted eisel and gall.
Sir T. More.

EI'THER. pron. [æȝðer, Sax. auther, Scottish.]

1. Which soever of the two; whether one or the other.

Lepidus flatters both,
Of both is flatter'd; but he neither loves,
Nor either cares for him. Shakesp. Ant. and Cleop.
So like in arms these champions were,
As they had been a very pair;
So that a man would almost swear,
That either had been either. Drayton's Nymp.
Goring made a fast friendship with Digby, either of them believing he could deceive the other. Clarendon.
I do not ask whether bodies do so exist, that the motion of one body cannot really be without the motion of another: to determine this either way, is to beg the question for or against a vacuum. Locke.

2. Each; both.

In the process of natural beings, there seem some to be creatures placed, as it were, on the confines of several provinces, and participating something of either. Hale.
Sev'n times the sun has either tropick view'd,
The Winter banish'd, and the Spring renew'd.
Dryden's Virgil.

3. It is used sometimes of more than two; any one of a certain number.

4. Any of an indeterminate number, as in the following passage:

Henry VIII. Francis I. and Charles V. were so provident, as scarce a palm of ground could be gotten by either of the three, but that the other two would set the balance of Europe upright again. Bacon.

EI'THER. adv. [from the noun.] A distributive adverb, answered by or; either the one or the other.

We never heard of any ship that had been seen to arrive upon any shore of Europe; no nor of either the East or West Indies. Bacon's New Atlan.
What perils shall we find,
If either place, or time, or other course,
Cause us to alter th' order now assign'd. Daniel.
Either your brethren have miserably deceived us, or power confers virtue. Swift to Pope.

EJULA'TION. n. s. [ejulatio, Lat.] Outcry; lamentation; moaning; wailing.

Instead of hymns and praises, he breaks out into ejulations and effeminate wailings.
Government of the Tongue.
With dismal groans
And ejulation, in the pangs of death,
Some call for aid. Philips.

EKE. adv. [eac, Sax. ook, Dut.] Also; likewise; beside; moreover.

If any strength we have, it is to ill;
But all the good is God's, both power and eke will.
Fairy Queen.
Now if 'tis chiefly in the heart
That courage does itself exert,
'Twill be prodigious hard to prove,
That this is eke the throne of love. Prior.

To EKE. v. a. [eacan, Sax.]

1. To increase.

I dempt there much to have eked my store,
But such eking hath made my heart sore. Spenser.
The little strength that I have, I would it were with you.
—And mine to eke out her's. Shak. As you like it.

2. To supply; to fill up deficiencies.

Still be kind,
And eke out our performance with your mind.
Shakesp.
Your ornaments hung all,
On some patch'd dogbole ek'd with ends of wall.
Pope.

3. To protract; to lengthen.

I speak too long; but 'tis to piece the time,
To eke it, and to draw it out in length,
To stay you from election. Shak. Mer. of Venice.

4. To spin out by useless additions. [In this sense it seems borrowed from the use of our old poets, who put eke into their lines, when they wanted a syllable.]

To ELA'BORATE. v. a. [elaboro, Lat.]

1. To produce with labour.

They in full joy elaborate a sigh. Young.

2. To heighten and improve by successive endeavours or operations.

The sap is diversified, and still more elaborated and exalted, as it circulates through the vessels of the plant. Arbuthnot.

ELA'BORATE. adj. [elaboratus, Lat.] Finished with great diligence; performed with great labour.

Formalities of extraordinary zeal and piety are never more studied and elaborate than when politicians most agitate desperate designs. K. Charles.
At least, on her bestow'd
Too much of ornament, of outward shew
Elaborate, of inward, less exact. Milton.
Man is thy theme, his virtue or his rage
Drawn to the life in each elab'rate page. Waller.
Consider the difference between elaborate discourses upon important occasions, delivered to parliaments, and a plain sermon intended for the common people. Swift.

ELA'BORATELY. adv. [from elaborate.] Laboriously; diligently; with great study or labour.

Politick conceptions, so elaborately formed and wrought, and grown at length ripe for delivery, do yet prove abortive. South.
Some coloured powders, which painters use, may have their colours a little changed, by being very elaborately and finely ground. Newton's Opt.
I will venture once to incur the censure of some persons, for being elaborately trifling. Bentley.

It is there elaborately shewn, that patents are good. Swift.

ELABORA'TION. n. s. [from elaborate.] Improvement by successive operations.

To what purpose is there such an apparatus of vessels for the elaboration of the sperm and eggs; such a tedious process of generation and nutrition. Ray.

To ELANCE. v. a. [elancer, Fr.] To throw out; to dart; to cast as a dart.

While thy unerring hand elanc'd
Another, and another dart, the people
Joyfully repeated Io! Prior.

Harsh words, that once elanc'd, must ever fly
Irrevocable. Prior.

To ELA'PSE. v. n. [elapsus, Lat.] To pass away; to glide away; to run out without notice.

There is a docible season, a learning time in youth, which, suffered to elapse, and no foundation laid, seldom returns. Clarissa.

ELA'STICAL } adj. [from ἐλάω.] Having
ELA'STICK. } the power of returning to the form from which it is distorted or withheld; springy; having the power of a spring.

By what elastick engines did she rear
The starry roof, and roll the orbs in air. Blackm.

If the body is compact, and bends or yields inward to pression, without any sliding of its parts, it is hard and elastick, returning to its figure with a force rising from the mutual attraction of its parts. Newton's Opticks.

The most common diversities of human constitutions arise from the solids, as to their different degrees of strength and tension; in some being too lax and weak, in others too elastick and strong. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

A fermentation must be excited in some assignable place, which may expand itself by its elastical power, and break through, where it meets with the weakest resistance. Bentley.

ELASTI'CITY. n. s. [from elastick.] Force in bodies, by which they endeavour to restore themselves to the posture from whence they were displaced by any external force. Quincy.

A lute-string will bear an hundred weight without rupture; but at the same time cannot exert its elasticity: take away fifty, and immediately it raiseth the weight. Arbuthnot.

Me emptiness and dulness could inspire,
And were my elasticity and fire. Pope.

ELA'TE. adj. [elatus, Lat.] Flushed with success; elevated with prosperity; lofty; haughty.

Oh, thoughtless mortals! ever blind to fate!
Too soon dejected, and too soon elate! Pope.

I, of mind elate, and scorning fear,
Thus with new taunts insult the monster's ear.
Pope's Odyssey.

To E'LATE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To elevate with success; to puff up with prosperity.
2. To exult; to heighten. An unusual sense.

Or truth, divinely breaking on his mind,
Elates his being, and unfolds his power. Thomson

ELATE'RIUM. n. s. [Lat.] An inspissated juice, light, of a friable texture and an acid and pungent taste. It is procured from the fruit of a wild cucumber. It is a very violent and rough purge. Hill.

ELA'TION. n. s. [from elate.] Haughtiness proceeding from success; pride of prosperity.

God began to punish this vain elation of mind, by withdrawing his favours Atterbury.

E'LBOW. n. s. [elboga, Sax.]

1. The next joint or curvature of the arm below the shoulder.

In some fair evening, on your elbow laid,
You dream of triumphs in the rural shade. Pope.

2. Any flexure or angle.

Fruit trees, or vines, set upon a wall between elbows or buttresses of stone, ripen more than upon a plain wall. Bacon.

3. To be at the Elbow. To be near; to be at hand.

Strait will he come;
Wear thy good rapier bare, and put it home:
Quick, quick; fear nothing, I'll be at thy elbow.
Shakesp. Othello.

ELBOWCHA'IR. n. s. [elbow and chair.] A chair with arms to support the elbows.

Swans and elbowchairs, in the opera of Diocletian, have danced upon the English stage with good success. Gay.

E'LBOWROOM. n. s. [elbow and room.] Room to stretch out the elbows on each side; perfect freedom from confinement.

Now my soul hath elbowroom;
It would not out at windows nor at doors. Shak.

The natives are not so many, but that there may be elbowroom enough for them, and for the adventives also. Bacon.

A politician must put himself into a state of liberty to provide elbowroom for conscience to have its full play in. South.

To E'LBOW. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To push with the elbow.

One elbows him, one jostles in the shole.
Dryden's Juvenal.

2. To push; to drive to a distance; to encroach upon.

It thrusts and stretches out,
And elbows all the kingdom round about. Dryd.

If fortune takes not off this boy betimes,
He'll make mad work and elbow out his neighbours. Dryden.

To E'LBOW. v. n. To jut out in angles.

ELD. n. s. [ealb, Sax. eld, Scottish.]

1. Old age; decrepitude.

Her heart with joy unwonted inly swell'd,
As feeling wond'rous comfort in her weaker eld.
Spenser.

Thy blazed youth
Becomes assuaged, and doth beg the alms
Of palsied eld. Shakesp. Measure for Measure.

He thought it touch'd his deity full near,
If likewise he some fair one wedded not,
Thereby to wipe away th' infamous blot
Of long uncoupled bed and childless eld. Milton.

2. Old people; persons worn out with years.

They count him of the green-hair'd eld. Chap.

E'LDER. adj. The comparative of eld, now corrupted to old. [ealb, ealbop, Sax.] Surpassing another in years; survivor; having the privileges of primogeniture: opposed to younger.

They bring the comparison of younger daughters conforming themselves in attire to their elder sisters. Hooker.

Let still the woman take
An elder than herself; so wears she to him,
So sways she level in her husband's heart. Shak.

How I firmly am resolv'd, you know;
That is, not to bestow my youngest daughter,
Before I have a husband for the elder. Shakesp.

Among the Lacedemonians, the chief magistrates, as they were, so were they called, elder men. Raleigh's History.

The elder of his children comes to acquire a degree of authority among the younger, by the same means the father did among them. Temple.

Fame's high temple stands;
Stupendous pile; not rear'd by mortal hands!
Whate'er proud Rome, or artful Greece beheld,
Or elder Babylon, its frame excell'd. Pope.

E'LDERS. n. s. [from elder.]

1. Persons whose age gives them a claim to credit and reverence.

Rebuke not an elder, but intreat him as a father, and the younger men as brethren. 1 Tim. v. 1.

Our elders say,
The barren, touched in this holy chase,
Shake off their steril curse. Shakesp. Ju. Cæsar.

The blushing youth their virtuous awe disclose,
And from their seats the reverend elders rose.
Sandys.

2. Ancestors.

Says the goose, If it will be no better, e'en carry your head as your elders have done before you. L'Estrange

I lose my patience, and I own it too,
Where works are censur'd, not as bad, but new;
While, if our elders break all reason's laws,
Those fools demand not pardon, but applause.
Pope.

3. Those who are older than others.

Many nations are very superstitious and diligent observers of old customs, which they received by continual tradition from their parents, by recording of their bards and chronicles, in their songs, and by daily use and ensample of their elders. Spenser's Ireland.

At the board, and in private, it very well becometh children's innocency to pray, and their elders to say Amen. Hooker.

4. [Among the Jews.] Rulers of the people.
5. [In the New Testaments.] Ecclesiasticks.
6. [Among Presbyterians.] Laymen introduced into the kirk-polity in sessions, presbyteries, synods, and assemblies.

Flea-bitten synod, an assembly brew'd
Of clerks and elders and; like the rude
Chaos of presbytry, where laymen ride
With the tame woolpack clergy by their side.
Cleaveland.

E'LDER. n. s. [ellaþa, Sax. sambucus.] The name of a tree.

The branches are full of pith, having but little wood: the flowers are monopetalous, divided into several segments, and expand in form of a rose: these are, for the most part, collected into an umbel, and are succeeded by soft succulent berries, having three seeds in each. Miller.

Look for thy reward
Amongst the nettles at the elder tree,
Which overshades the mouth of that same pit.
Shakesp.

E'LDERSHIP. n. s [from elder.]

1. Seniority; primogeniture.

The world, while it had scarcity of people, underwent no other dominion than paternity and eldership. Raleigh.

That all should Alibech adore, 'tis true;
But some respect is to my birthright due:
My claim to her by eldership I prove.
Dryden's Ind. Emp.

Nor were the eldership
Of Artaxerxes worth our least of fears,
If Memnon's interest did not prop his cause. Rowe.

2. Presbytery; ecclesiastical senate; kirk-session.

That controversy sprang up between Beza and Erastus, about the matter of excommunications; whether there ought to be in all churches an eldership, having power to excommunicate, and a part of that eldership to be of necessity certain chosen out from amongst the laity. Hooker, Pref.

E'LDEST. adj. The superlative of eld, now changed to old. [ealb, ealbop, ealbyrte, Sax.]

1. The oldest; that has the right of primogeniture.

We will establish our estate upon
Our eldest Malcolm, whom we name hereafter
The prince of Cumberland. Shakesp. Macbeth.

The mother's and her eldest daughter's grace,
It seems, had brib'd him to prolong their space.
Dryden.

2. The person that has lived most years.

Eldest parents signifies either the oldest men and women that have had children, or those who have longest had issue. Locke.

ELECAMPA'NE. n. s. [helenium, Lat.] A plant, named also starwort. Botanists enumerate thirty species of this plant. Miller.

The Germans have a method of candying elecampane root like ginger, to which they prefer it, and call it German spice. Hill's Materia Med.

To ELE'CT. v. a. [electus, Lat.]

1. To choose for any office or use; to take in preference to others.

Henry his son is chosen king, though young;
And Lewis of France, elected first, beguil'd Daniel.
This prince in gratitude to the people, by whose consent he was chosen, elected a hundred senators out of the commoners. Swift.

2. [In theology.] To select as an object of eternal mercy.

ELE'CT. adj. [from the verb.]

1. Chosen, taken by preference from among others.

You have here, lady,
And of your choice, these reverend fathers,
Yea, the elect of the land, who are assembl'd
To plead your cause. Shakesp. Hen. VIII.

2. Chosen to an office, not yet in possession.

The bishop elect takes the oaths of supremacy, canonical obedience, and against simony; and then the dean of arches reads and subscribes the sentences. Ayliffe's Parergon.

3. [In theology.] Chosen as an object of eternal mercy.

A vicious liver, believing that Christ died for none but the elect, shall have attempts made upon him to reform and amend his life. Hammond.
Some I have chosen of peculiar grace,
Elect above the rest: so is my will. Milton.

ELE'CTION. n. s. [electio, Lat.]

1. The act of chusing; the act of selecting one or more from a greater number for any use or office; choice.

If the election of the minister should be committed to every several parish, do you think that they would chuse the meetest? Whitgift.
Him, not thy election,
But natural necessity, begot. Milton
As charity is, nothing can more increase the lustre and beauty than a prudent election of objects, and a fit application of it to them. Spratt.

2. The power of choice.

For what is man without a moving mind,
Which hath a judging wit, and chusing will?
Now if God's pow'r should her election bind,
Her motions then would cease, and stand all still.
Davies.

3. Voluntary preference.

He calls upon the sinners to turn themselves and live; he tells us, that he has set before us life and death, and referred it to our own election which we will chuse. Rogers.

4. Discernment; distinction; discrimination.

The discovering of these colours cannot be done but out of a very universal knowledge of things: which so cleareth men's judgment and election, as it is the less apt to slide into error. Bacon.
In favour, to use men with much differences and election is good: for it maketh those preferred more thankful, and the rest more officious. Bacon.

5. [In theology.] The predetermination of God by which any were selected for eternal life.

The conceit about absolute election to eternal life, some enthusiasts entertaining, have been made remiss in the practice of virtue. Atterbury.

6. The ceremony of a publick choice.

I was sorry to hear with what partiality, and popular heat, elections were carried in many places. King Charles.
Since the late dissolution of the club, many persons put up for the next election. Add. Spectator.

ELE'CTIVE. adj. [from elect.]

1. Regulated or bestowed by election or choice.

I will say positively and resolutely, that it is impossible an elective monarchy should be so free and absolute as an hereditary. Bacon.
The last change of their government, from elective to hereditary, has made it seem hitherto of less force, and unfitter for action abroad. Temple.

2. Exerting the power of choice.

To talk of compelling a man to be good, is a contradiction; for where there is force, there can be no choice: whereas all moral goodness consisteth in the elective act of the understanding will. Grew's Cosmologia Sacra.

ELE'CTIVELY. adj. [from elect.] By choice; with preference of one to another.

How or why that should have such an influence upon the spirits, as to drive them into those muscles electively, I am not subtle enough to discern. Ray on the Creation.
They work not electively, or upon proposing to themselves an end of their operations. Grew.

ELE'CTOR. n. s. [from elect.]

1. He that has a vote in the choice of any officer.

From the new world her silver and her gold
Came, like a tempest, to confound the old;
Feeding with these the brib'd electors' hopes,
Alone she gave us emperors and popes. Waller.

2. A prince who has a voice in the choice of the German emperour.

ELE'CTORAL. adj. [from elector.] Having the dignity of an elector.

ELE'CTORATE. n. s. [from elector.] The territory of an elector.

He has a great and powerful king for his son-in-law; and can himself command, when he pleases, the whole strength of an electorate in the empire. Addison's Freeholder.

ELE'CTRE. n. s. [electrum, Lat.]

1. Amber; which, having the quality when warmed by friction of attracting bodies, gave to one species of attraction the name of electricity, and to the bodies that so attract the epithet electrick.

2. A mixed metal.

Change silver plate or vessel into the compound stuff, being a kind of silver electre, and turn the rest into coin. Bacon.

ELE'CTRICAL. } adj. [from electrum.]
ELE'CTRICK. } See ELECTRE.

1. Attractive without magnetism; attractive by a peculiar property, supposed once to belong chiefly to amber.

By electrick bodies do I conceive not such only as take up light bodies, in which number the ancients only placed jett and amber; but such as, conveniently placed, attract all bodies palpable. Brown's Vulg. Err.
An electrick body can by friction emit an exhalation so subtile, and yet so potent, as by its emission to cause no sensible diminution of the weight of the electrick body, and to be expanded through a sphere, whose diameter is above two feet, and yet to be able to carry up lead, copper, or leaf-gold, at the distance of above a foot from the electrick body. Newton.

2. Produced by an electrick body.

If that attraction were not rather electrical than magnetical, it was wonderous what Helmont delivereth concerning a glass, wherein the magistery of loadstone was prepared, which retained an attractive quality. Brown.
If a piece of white paper, or a white cloth, or the end of one's finger, be held at about a quarter of an inch from the glass, the electrick vapour, excited by friction, will, by dashing against the white paper, cloth, or finger, be put into such an agitation as to emit light. Newton's Opticks.

ELECTRI'CITY. n. s. [from electrick. See ELECTRE.] A property in some bodies, whereby, when rubbed so as to grow warm, they draw little bits of paper, or such like substances, to them. Quincy.

Such was the account given a few years ago of electricity; but the industry of the present age, first excited by the experiments of Gray, has discovered in electricity a multitude of philosophical wonders. Bodies electrified by a sphere of glass, turned nimbly round, not only emit flame, but may be fitted with such a quantity of the electrical vapour, as if discharged at once upon a human body, would endanger life. The force of this vapour has hitherto appeared instantaneous, persons at both ends of a long chain seeming to be struck at once. The philosophers are now endeavouring to intercept the strokes of lightning.

ELE'CTUARY. n. s. [electarium, Cælius Aurel. which is now written electuary.] A form of medicine made of conserves and powders, in the consistence of honey. Electuaries made up with honey or syrup, when the consistence is too thin, ferment: and when too thick, candy. By both which the ingredients will be altered or impaired. Quincy.

We meet with divers electuaries, which have no ingredient, except sugar, common to any two of them. Boyle.

ELEEMO'SYNARY. adj. [ἐλεημοσύνη.]

1. Living upon alms; depending upon charity. Not used.

It is little better than an absurdity, that the cause should be an eleemosynary for its subsistence to its effects, as a nature posteriour to and dependent on itself. Glanville's Scepsis.

2. Given in charity. This is the present use.

E'LEGANCE. } n. s. [elegantia, Lat.]
E'LEGANCY. }

1. Beauty rather soothing than striking; beauty without grandeur; the beauty of propriety not of greatness.

St. Augustine, out of a kind of elegancy in writing, makes some difference. Raleigh's Hist.
These questions have more propriety, and elegancy, understood of the old world. Burnet.

2. Any thing that pleases by its nicety. In this sense it has a plural.

My compositions in gardening are altogether Pindarick, and run into the beautiful wildness of nature, without the nicer elegancies of art. Spect.

E'LEGANT. adj. [elegans, Lat.]

1. Pleasing by minuter beauties.

Trifles themselves are elegant in him. Pope.
There may'st thou find some elegant retreat.
London.

2. Nice; not coarse; not gross.

Polite with candour, elegant with ease. Pope

E'LEGANTLY. adv. [from elegant.]

1. In such a manner as to please.

Now read with them those organic arts which enable men to discourse and write perspicuously, elegantly, and according to the fittest style of lofty, mean, or lowly. Milton.
In a poem elegantly writ,
I will not quarrel with a slight mistake. Roscom.

2. Neatly; nicely; with minute beauty; with pleasing propriety.

They describe her in part finely and elegantly, and in part gravely and sententiously. Bacon.

Whoever would write elegantly, must have regard to the different turn and juncture of every period: there must be proper distances and pauses. Pope's Odyssey, Notes.

ELEGI'ACK. adj. [elegiacus, Lat.]

1. Used in elegies.
2. Pertaining to elegies.
3. Mournful; sorrowful.

Let elegiac lay the woe relate,
Soft as the breath of distant flutes. Gay's Trivia.

E'LEGY. n. s. [elegus, Lat.]

1. A mournful song.

He hangs odes upon hawthorns, and elegies upon brambles, all forsooth deifying the name of Rosalind. Shakesp.

2. A funeral song.

So on Meander's banks, when death is nigh,
The mournful swan sings her own elegy. Dryd.

3. A short poem without points or affected elegancies.

E'LEMENT. n. s. [elementum, Lat.]

1. The first or constituent principle of any thing.

If nature should intermit her course, those principal and mother elements of the world, whereof all things in this lower world are made, should lose the qualities which now they have. Hooker.

A man may rationally retain doubts concerning the number of those ingredients of bodies, which some call elements, and others principles. Boyle.

Simple substances are either spirits, which have no manner of composition, or the first principles of bodies, usually called elements, of which other bodies are compounded. Watts.

2. The four elements, usually so called, are earth, fire, air, water, of which our world is composed. When it is used alone, element commonly means the air.

The king is but a man: the violet smells to him as it doth to me; and the element shews to him as it doth to me. Shakesp.

My dearest sister, fare thee well;
The elements be kind to thee, and make
Thy spirits all of comfort. Shakesp. Ant. and Cleop.

The king,
Contending with the fretful elements,
Bids the wind blow the earth into the sea,
Or swell the curled waters. Shakesp. K. Lear.

The heavens and the earth will pass away, and the elements melt with fervent heat. Peter.

Here be four of you, able to make a good world; for you are as differing as the four elements. Bacon.

He from his flaming ship his children sent,
To perish in a milder element. Waller.

3. The proper habitation or sphere of any thing: as water of fish.

We are simple men; we do not know the works by charms, by spells, and such daubry as is beyond our element. Shakesp.

Our torments may, in length of time,
Become our elements. Milton.

They shew that they are out of their element, and that logick is none of their talent. Baker on Learning.

4. An ingredient; a constituent part.

Who set the body and the limbs
Of this great sport together, as you guess?
——One sure that promises no element
In such a business. Shakesp. Henry VIII.

5. The letters of any language.
6. The lowest or first rudiments of literature or science.

With religion it fareth as with other sciences; the first delivery of the elements thereof must, for like consideration, be framed according to the weak and slender capacity of young beginners. Hooker.

Every parish should keep a petty schoolmaster, which should bring up children in the first elements of letters. Spenser.

We, when we were children, were in bondage under the elements of the world. Gal. iv. 3.

There is nothing more pernicious to a youth, in the elements of painting, than an ignorant master. Dryden.

To E'LEMENT. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To compound of elements.

Whether any one such body be met with, in those said to be elemented bodies, I now question. Boyle.

2. To constitute; to make as a first principle.

Dull sublunary lover's love,
Whose soul is sense, cannot admit
Of absence, 'cause it doth remove
The thing which elemented it. Donne.

ELEME'NTAL. adj. [from element.]

1. Produced by some of the four elements.

If dusky spots are vary'd on his brow,
And streak'd with red, a troubl'd colour show;
That sullen mixture shall at once declare
Winds, rain, and storms, and elemental war.
Dryden's Virgil.

Soft yielding minds to water glide away,
And sip with nymphs their elemental tea. Pope.

2. Arising from first principles.

Leeches are by some accounted poison, not properly, that is by temperamental contrariety, occult form, or so much as elemental repugnancy; but inwardly taken, they fasten upon the veins, and occasion an effusion of blood. Brown.

ELEMENTA'RITY. n. s. [from elementary.] Containing rudiments or first principles; the simplicity of nature, or absence of composition; being uncompounded.

A very large class of creatures in the earth, far above the condition of elementarity. Brown's Vulg. Err.

ELEME'NTARY. adj. [from element.]

1. Uncompounded; having only one principle or constituent part.

All rain water contains in it a copious sediment of terrestrial matter, and is not a simple elementary water. Ray.

The elementary salts of animals are not the same as they appear by distillation. Arbuth. on Aliments.

2. Initial; rude.

ELE'MI. n. s.

This drug is improperly called gum elemi, being a resin. The genuine elemi is brought from Æthiopia in flattish masses, or in cylinders, of a yellowish colour. It is very rare in Europe, and supposed to be produced by a tree of the olive kind. The spurious or American elemi, almost the only kind known, is of a whitish colour, with a greater or less greenish or yellowish tinge. It proceeds from a tall tree, which the Brasilians wound, and collect the resin. Hill's Mat. Med.

ELE'NCH. n. s. [elenchus, Lat.] An argument; a sophism.

The first delusion Satan put upon Eve, and his whole tentation might be the same elench continued, as when he said, Ye shall not die; that was, in his equivocation, you shall not incur present death. Brown's Vulg. Err.

Discover the fallacies of our common adversary, that old sophister, who puts the most abusive elenches onus. Decay of Piety.

ELE'OTS. n. s. Some name the apples in request in the cyder countries so; not known by that name in several parts of England. Mortimer's Husbandry.

E'LEPHANT. n. s. [elephas, Lat.]

1. The largest of all quadrupeds, of whose sagacity, faithfulness, prudence, and even understanding, many surprising relations are given. This animal feeds on hay, herbs, and all sorts of pulse; and is said to be extremely long lived. He is supplied with a trunk, or long hollow cartilage, which hangs between his teeth, and serves him for hands. His teeth are the ivory. Calmet.

He loves to hear,
That unicorns may be betray'd with trees,
And bears with glasses, elephants with holes. Shak.

The elephant hath joints, but not for courtesy; His legs are for necessity, not flexure. Shakesp.

2. Ivory; the teeth of elephants.

High o'er the gate, in elephant and gold,
The crowd shall Cæsar's Indian war behold.
Dryden's Virgil.

ELEPHANTI'ASIS. n. s. [elephantiasis, Lat.] A species of leprosy, so called from covering the skin with incrustations like those on the hide of an elephant.

ELEPHA'NTINE. adj. [elephantinus, Lat.] Pertaining to the elephant.

To E'LEVATE. v. a. [elevo, Lat.]

1. To raise up aloft.

This subterraneal heat or fire, which elevates the water out of the abyss. Woodward.

2. To exalt; to dignify.
3. To raise with great conceptions.

Others apart sat on a hill retir'd,
In thoughts more elevate, and reason'd high
Of providence, foreknowledge, will, and fate. Mil.

In all that great extent, wherein the mind wanders, in those remote speculations it may seem to be elevated with, it stirs not beyond sense or reflection. Locke.

Now rising fortune elevates his mind,
He shines unclouded, and adorns mankind. Savage.

4. To elate with vicious pride.

To mischief swift, hope elevates, and joy
Brightens his crest. Milton.

5. To lessen by detraction. This sense, though legitimately deduced from the Latin, is not now in use.

When the judgments of learned men are alledged against you, what do they but either elevate their credit, or oppose unto them the judgments of others as learned? Hooker.

E'LEVATE. part. adj. [from elevated.] Exalted; raised aloft.

On each side an imperial city stood,
With tow'rs and temples proudly elevate
On seven small hills. Milton.

ELEVA'TION. n. s. [elevatio, Lat.]

1. The act of raising aloft.

The disruption of the strata, the elevation of some, and depression of others, did not fall out by chance, but were directed by a discerning principle. Woodward.

2. Exaltation; dignity.

Angels, in their several degrees of elevation above us, may be endowed with more comprehensive faculties. Locke.

3. Exaltation of the mind by noble conceptions.

We are therefore to love him with all possible application and elevation of spirit, with all the heart, soul and mind. Norris.

4. Exaltation of style.

His style was an elegant, [illegible] rich of phrase, but seldom any bold metaphors; and so far from tumid, that it rather wanted a little elevation. Wotton.

5. Attention to objects above us.

All which different elevations of spirit unto God, are contained in the name of prayer. Hooker.

6. The height of any heavenly body with respect to the horizon.

Some latitudes have no canicular days, as those which have more than seventy-three degrees of northern elevation, as Nova Zembla. Brown's Vulg. Err.

ELEVA'TOR. n. s. [from elevate.] A raiser or lifter up, applied to some chirurgical instruments put to such uses. Quincy.

ELE'VEN. adj. [ænblefen, Sax.] Ten and one; one more than ten.

Had I a dozen sons, and none less dear than Marcius, I had rather eleven die nobly for their country, than one voluptuously forfeit out of action. Shak.

ELE'VENTH. adj. [from eleven.] The next in order to the tenth.

In the eleventh chapter he returns to speak of the building of Babel. Raleigh's History.

ELF. n. s. plural elves. [elf, Welsh. Baxter's Gloss.]

1. A wandering spirit, supposed to be seen in wild unfrequented places; a fairy.

Through this house give glimmering light,
By the dead and drowsy fire;
Every elf, and fairy sprite,
Hop as light as bird from briar. Shakesp.

Fairy elves,
Whose midnight revels by some forest side,
Or fountain, some belated peasant sees,
Or dreams he sees. Milton.

The king of elfs and little fairy queen
Gambol'd on heaths, and danc'd on ev'ry green. Dryden

If e'er one vision touch'd thy infant thought,
Of all the nurse and all the priest have taught,
Of airy elves by moon-light shadow seen,
The silver token, and the circled green. Pope.

2. A devil.

That we may angels seem, we paint them elves;
And are but satires to set up ourselves. Dryden.

However it was civil, an angel or elf;
For he ne'er could have fill'd it so well of himself. Swift.

To ELF. v. a. [from the noun.] To entangle hair in so intricate a manner, that it is not to be unravelled. This the vulgar have supposed to be the work of fairies in the night; and all hair so matted together, hath had the name of elf-locks. Hanmer.

My face I'll grime with filth,
Blanket my loins, elf all my hair in knots. Shakesp.

E'LFIN. adj. [from elf.] Relating to fairies; elfish; belonging to elves.

Now when that idle dream was to him brought,
Unto that elfin knight he bade him fly,
Where he slept soundly. Spenser.

E'LFLOCK. n. s. [elf and lock.] Knots of hair twisted by elves.

This is that very Mab,
That plats the manes of horses in the night,
And cakes the elf-locks in foul sluttish hairs,
Which, once untangl'd, much misfortune bodes. Shakesp.

To ELI'CITE. v. a. [elicio, Lat.] To strike out; to fetch out by labour or art.

Although the same truths may be elicited, and explicated by the contemplation of animals, yet they are more clearly evidenced in the contemplation of man. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

He elicits those acts out of the meer lapsed state of human nature. Cheyne.

ELI'CIT. adj. [elicitus, Lat.] Brought into act; brought from possibility to real existence.

It is the virtue of humility and obedience, and not the formal elicit act of meekness; meekness being ordinarily annexed to these virtues. Hamm.

The schools dispute whether, in morals, the external action superadds any thing of good or evil to the internal elicit act of the will. South.

ELICITA'TION. n. s. [from elicio, Lat.]

That elicitation which the schools intend, is a deducing of the power of the will into act: that drawing which they mention, is merely from the appetibility of the object. Bramhall.

To ELI'DE. v. a. [elido, Lat.] To break in pieces; to crush.

We are to cut off that whereunto they, from whom these objections proceed, fly for defence, when the force and strength of the argument is eluded. Hooker.

E'LIGIBILITY. n. s. [from eligible.] Worthiness to be chosen.

The business of the will is not to judge concerning the nature of things, but to choose them in consequence of the report made by the understanding, as to their eligibility or goodness. Fiddes's Serm.

E'LIGIBLE. adj. [eligibilis, Lat.] Fit to be chosen; worthy of choice; preferable.

A British ministry ought to be satisfied, if, allowing to every particular man that his private scheme is wisest, they can persuade him, that next to his own plan, that of the government is the most eligible. Addison's Freeholder.

Did they really think, that going on with the war was more eligible for their country than the least abatement of those conditions? Swift.

That the most plain, short, and lawful way to any good end, is more eligible than one directly contrary in some or all of these qualities. Swift.

Certainty, in a deep distress, is more eligible than suspense. Clarissa.

E'LIGIBLENESS. n. s. [from eligible.] Worthiness to be chosen; preferableness.

ELIMINA'TION. n. s. [elimino, Lat.] The act of banishing; the act of turning out of doors; rejection. Dict.

ELI'SION. n. s. [elisio, Lat.]

1. The act of cutting off; as, can't th' attempt, there is an elision of a syllable.

You will observe the abbreviation and elisions, by which consonants of most obdurate sounds are joined together, without any softening vowel to intervene. Swift.

2. Division; separation of parts.

The cause given of sound, that it would be an elision of the air, whereby, if they mean any thing, they mean a cutting or dividing, or else an attenuating of the air, is but a term of ignorance. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

ELIXA'TION. n. s. [elixus, Lat.] The act of boiling or stewing any thing.

Even to ourselves, and more perfect animals, water performs no substantial nutrition; serving for refrigeration, dilution of solid aliments, and its elixation in the stomach. Brown.

ELI'XIR. n. s. [Arabick.]

1. A medicine made by strong infusion, where the ingredients are almost dissolved in the menstruum, and give it a thicker consistence than a tincture. Quin.

For when no healing art prevail'd,
When cordials and elixirs fail'd,
On your pale cheek he dropp'd the show'r,
Reviv'd you like a dying flow'r. Waller.

2. The liquor, or whatever it be, with which chymists hope to transmute metals to gold.

No chymist yet the elixir got,
But glorifies his pregnant pot,
If by the way to him befal
Some odoriferous thing, or medicinal. Donne.

3. The extract or quintessence of any thing.

In the soul, when the supreme faculties move regularly, the inferior passions and affections following, there arises a serenity infinitely beyond the highest quintessence and elixir of worldly delight. South.

4. Any cordial or invigorating substance.

What wonder then, if fields and regions here
Breathe forth elixir pure! Milton's Par. Lost.

ELK. n. s. [ælc, Sax.]

The elk is a large and stately animal of the stag kind. The neck is short and slender; the ears nine inches in length, and four in breadth. The colour of its coat in Winter is greyish, in Summer it is paler. The horns of the male elk are short and thick near the head, where it by degrees expands into a great breadth, with several prominences in its edges. Hill

... And, scarce his head
Rais'd o'er the heapy wreath, the branching elk
Lies slumb'ring silent in the white abyss. Thomson

ELL. n. s. [eln, Sax.]

1. A measure containing forty-five inches, or a yard and a quarter.

They are said to make yearly forty thousand pieces of linen cloth, reckoning two hundred ells to the piece. Addison.

2. It is taken proverbially for a long measure.

Acquit thee bravely, play the man;
Look not on pleasures as they come, but go:
Defer not the last virtue; life's poor span
Makes not an ell by trifling in thy woe. Herbert

ELLIPSIS. n. s. [ἔλλειψις.]

1. A figure of rhetorick, by which something is left out necessary to be supplied by the hearer: as, the thing I love, for the thing which I love.

The words are delivered by way of ellipsis, Rom. iv. 18. Hammond.

2. [In geometry.] An oval figure, being generated from the section of a cone, by a plane cutting both sides of the cone, but not parallel to the base, which produces a circle, and meeting with the base when produced. Harris.

On the cylinder inclined, describe an ellipsis parallel to the horizon. Wilkins's Dædalus.

The planets could not possibly acquire such revolutions in circular orbs, or in ellipses very little eccentrick. Bentley.

ELLI'PTICAL. } adj. [from ellipsis.] Hav-
ELLI'PTICK. } ing the form of an ellipsis; oval.

Since the planets move in elliptick orbits, in one of whose foci the sun is, and by a radius from the sun describe equal areas in equal times, which no other law of a circulating fluid, but the harmonical circulation, can account for; we must find out a law for the paracentrical motion, that may make the orbits elliptick. Cheyne's Phil. Prin.

In animals, that gather food from the ground, the pupil is oval or elliptical; the greatest diameter going transversely from side to side. Cheyne's Phil. Prin.

ELM. n. s. [ulmus, Lat. elm, Sax.]

1. The name of a tree. The species are, the common rough-leaved elm; the witch hazel, or broad-leaved elm, by some called the British elm; the smooth-leaved or witch elm. Neither of them were originally natives of this country; but they have propagated themselves by seeds and suckers in such plenty as hardly to be rooted out; especially in hedgerows, where there is harbour for their roots. They are very proper to place in hedgerows upon the borders of the fields, where they will thrive better than when planted in a wood or close plantation, and their shade will not be very injurious to whatever grows under them; for they may be trained up in form of an hedge, keeping them cut every year, to the height of forty or fifty feet: but they should not be planted too near fruit trees; because the roots of the elm will intermix with the roots of other trees, and deprive them of nourishment. Miller.

The rural seat,
Whose lofty elms and venerable oaks,

invite the rook, who high amid' the boughs,
In early Spring, his airy city builds. Dennis.

2. It was used to support vines, to which the poets allude.

Thou art an elm, my husband; I a vine,
Whose weakness married to thy stronger state,
Makes me with thy strength to communicate.
Shakesp.

ELOCU'TION. n. s. [elocutio, Lat.]

1. The power of fluent speech.

A travelled doctor of physick, of bold, and of able elocution. Wotton.

2. Power of speaking; speech.

Whose taste, too long forborne, at first essay
Gave elocution to the mute, and taught
The tongue not made for speech to speak thy praise. Milton.

3. The power of expression or diction; eloquence; beauty of words.

The third happiness of this poet's imagination is elocution, or the art of cloathing or adorning that thought so found, and varied, in apt, significant, and sounding words. Dryden.

As I have endeavoured to adorn it with noble thoughts, so much more to express those thoughts with elocution. Dryden.

E'LOGY. n. s. [eloge, Fr.] Praise; panegyrick.

Buckingham lay under millions of maledictions, which at the prince's arrival did vanish into praises and elogies. Wotton.

If I durst say all I know of the elogies received concerning him, I should offend the modesty of our author. Boyle.

Some excellent persons, above my approbation or elogy, have considered this subject.
Holder's Elements of Speech.

To E'LOIGNE. v. a. [eloigner, Fr.] To put at a distance; to remove one far from another. Now disused.

From wordly care himself he did eloin,
And greatly shunned manly exercise. Fairy Queen.

I'll tell thee now, dear love! what thou shalt do
To anger destiny, as she doth us;
How I shall stay though she eloigne me thus,
And how posterity shall know it too. Donne.

To ELONGATE. v. a. [from longus, Lat.]

1. To lengthen; to draw out; to protract: to stretch.

2. To put further off.

The first star of Aries, in the time of Meton the Athenian, was placed in the very intersection, which is now elongated and moved eastward twenty-eight degrees. Brown.

To ELO'NGATE. v. n. To go off to a distance from any thing.

About Cape Frio in Brasilia, the South point of the compass varieth twelve degrees unto the West; but elongating from the coast of Brasilia, towards the shore of Africa, it varieth eastward.
Brown's Vulg. Errours.

ELONGA'TION. n. s. [from elongate.]

1. The act of stretching or lengthening itself.

To this motion of elongation of the fibres, is owing the union or conglutination of the parts of the body, when they are separated by a wound.
Arbuthnot on Aliments.

2. The state of being stretched.

3. [In medicine.] An imperfect luxation, when the ligament of any joint is so extended or relaxed as to lengthen the limb, but yet not let the bone go quite out of its place. Quincy.

Elongations are the effect of an humour soaking upon a ligament, thereby making it liable to be stretched, and to be thrust quite out upon every little force. Wiseman's Surgery.

4. Distance; space at which one thing is distant from another.

The distant points in the celestial expanse appear to the eye in so small a degree of elongation from another, as bears no proportion to what is real. Glanville's Scepsis.

5. Departure; removal.

Nor then had it been placed in a middle point, but that of descent, or elongation.
Brown's Vulg. Errours.

To ELOPE. v. a. [loopen to run, Dut.] To run away; to break loose; to escape from law or restraint.

It is necessary to treat women as members of the body politick, since great numbers of them have eloped from their allegiance. Addison's Freeholder.

What from the dame can Paris hope?
She may as well from him elope. Prior.

The fool whose wife elopes some thrice a quarter,
For matrimonial solace dies a martyr. Pope.

ELO'PEMENT. n. s. [from elope.] Departure from just restraint; rejection of lawful power: commonly used of a wife.

An elopement is the voluntary departure of a wife from her husband to live with an adulterer, and with whom she lives in breach of the matrimonial vow. Ayliffe's Parergon.

The negligent husband, trusting to the efficacy of his principle, was undone by his wife's elopement from him. Arbuthnot.

ELOPS. n. s. [ἕλοψ.] A fish; reckoned however by Milton among the serpents.

Scorpion and asp, and amphisbena dire,
Cerastes horn'd, hydrus, and elops drear,
And dipsas. Milton's Paradise Lost.

E'LOQUENCE. n. s. [eloquentia, Lat.]

1. The power of speaking with fluency and elegance; oratory.

Action is eloquence, and the eyes of the ignorant
More learned than the ears. Shakesp. Coriolanus.

Athens or free Rome, where eloquence
Flourish'd since mute. Milton.

His infant softness pleads a milder doom,
And speaks with all the eloquence of tears. Heigh.

2. Elegant language uttered with fluency.

Say she be mute, and will not speak a word:
Then I'll commend her volubility,
And say she utter'd piercing eloquence. Shakesp.

Fit words attended on his weighty sense,
And mild persuasion flow'd in eloquence. Pope's Od

E'LOQUENT. adj. [eloquens, Lat.] Having the power of oratory; having the power of fluent and elegant speech.

The Lord of hosts doth take away the captain of fifty, and the honourable man, and the counsellor, and the cunning artificer, and the eloquent orator. Isaiah, iii. 3.

O death! all eloquent, you only prove
What dust we dote on, when 'tis man we love.
Pope.

ELSE. pronoun. [ellep, Sax.] Other; one besides: it is applied both to persons and things.

To stand stained with travel, and sweating with desire to see him; thinking of nothing else, putting all affairs else in oblivion, as if there were nothing else to be done but to see him. Shakesp. Henry IV.

Should he or any else search, he will find evidence of the Divine Wisdom.
Hale's Origin of Mankind.

He says, 'twas then with him, as now with you;
He did it when he had nothing else to do. Denham.

ELSE. adv.

1. Otherwise.

Dare not, on thy life,
Touch ought of mine beside, by lot my due,
But stand aloof, and think profane to view:
This faulchion, else, not hitherto withstood,
These hostile fields shall fatten with thy blood.
Dryden.

What ways are there whereby we should be assured, but either by an internal impression of the notion of a God upon our minds, or else by such external and visible effects as our reason tells us must be attributed to some cause? Tillotson.

2. Beside; except that mentioned.

Pleasures which no where else were to be found,
And all Elysium in a spot of ground. Dryden.

3. It has sometimes or before it superfluously.

Be more abstemious,
Or else, good night your vow. Shakesp.

E'LSEWHERE. adv. [else and where.]

1. In any other place.

There are here divers trees, which are not to be found elsewhere. Abbot's Descrip. of the World.

As he proved that Pison was not Ganges, or Gehon, Nilus; so where to find them elsewhere he knew not. Raleigh's History.

For, if we chance to fix our thoughts elsewhere,
Though our eyes open be, we cannot see. Davies.

Henceforth oracles are ceas'd,
And thou no more with pomp and sacrifice
Shalt be enquir'd at Delphos, or elsewhere. Milton.

Although seasoned bodies may and do live near as long in London as elsewhere, yet new-comers and children do not. Graunt's Bills of Mortality.

2. In other places; in some other place.

They which elsewhere complain, that injury is offered to the meanest minister, when the magistrate appointeth him what to wear, think the gravest prelates no competent judges where it is fit for the minister to stand. Hooker.

Let us no more contend, nor blame
Each other, blam'd enough elsewhere. Milton.

Bestow, base man, thy idle threats elsewhere;
My mother's daughter knows not how to fear.
Dryden.

If it contradict what he says elsewhere, it is no new or strange thing. Tillotson.

To ELU'CIDATE. v. a. [elucido, Lat.] To explain; to clear; to make plain.

To elucidate a little the matter, let us consider it. Boyle.

ELUCIDA'TION. n. s. [from elucidate.] Explanation; exposition.

We shall, in order to the elucidation of this matter, subjoin the following experiment. Boyle.

ELUCIDA'TOR. n. s. [from elucidate.] Explainer; expositor; commentator.

Obscurity is brought over them by the course of ignorance and age, and yet more by their pedantical elucidators. Abbot.

To ELU'DE. v. a. [eludo, Lat.]

1. To escape by stratagem; to avoid any mischief or danger by artifice.

Several pernicious vices, notorious among us, escape or elude the punishment of any law yet invented. Swift.

He who looks no higher for the motives of his conduct than the resentments of human justice, whenever he can presume himself cunning enough to elude, rich enough to bribe, or strong enough to resist it, will be under no restraint. Rogers

2. To mock by an unexpected escape.

Me gentle Delia beckons from the plain,
Then, hid in shades, eludes her eager swain;
But feigns a laugh to see me search around,
And by that laugh the willing fair is found. Pope.

ELU'DIBLE. adj. [from elude.] Possible to be defeated.

There is not any common place more insisted on than the happiness of trials by juries; yet if this blessed part of our law be eludible by power and artifice, we shall have little reason to boast. Swift.

ELVES. The plural of elf. See ELF.

Fairy elves
Whose midnight revels by some forest side,
Or fountain, some belated peasant sees,
Or dreams he sees. Milton.

Ye sylphs and sylphids to your chief give ear;
Fays, fairies, genii, elves and demons hear. Pope.

E'LVELOCK. n. s. [from elves and lock.]

Knots in the hair superstitiously supposed to be tangled by the fairies.

From the like might proceed the fears of polling elvelocks, or complicated hairs of the head. Brown's Vulg. Err.

E'LVISH. adj. [from elves, the plural of elf: it had been written more properly elfish.] Relating to elves, or wandering spirits.

Thou elvish markt, abortive, rioting hog!
The slave of nature, and the son of hell! Shakesp.

No muse hath been so bold,
Or of the latter or the old,
Those elvish secrets to unfold,
Which lie from others reading. Drayton.

ELU'MBATED. adj [elumbis, Lat.] Weakened in the loins. Dict.

ELU'SION. n. s. [elusio, Lat.] An escape from enquiry or examination; a fraud; an artifice

To ELU'TE. v. a. [eluo, Lat.] To wash off.

The more oily any spirit is, the more pernicious; because it is harder to be eluted by the blood. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

To ELU'TRIATE. v. a. [elutrio, Lat.] To decant; or strain out.

The pressure of the air upon the lungs is much less than it has been computed by some; but still it is something, and the alteration of one tenth of its force upon the lungs must produce some difference in elutriating the blood as it passes through the lungs. Arbuthnot on Air.

ELY'SIAN. adj [elysius, Lat.] Pertaining to Elysium; pleasant; deliciously soft and soothing; exceedingly delightful.

The river of life, through midst of heaven,
Rolls o'er elysian flowers her amber stream. Milton.

ELYSIUM. n. s. [Lat.] The place assigned by the heathens to happy souls; any place exquisitely pleasant.

To have thee with thy lips to stop my mouth,
So should'st thou either turn my flying soul,
Or I should breathe it so into thy body,
And then it liv'd in sweet Elysium. Shak Hen. VI.

'EM. A contraction of them.

For he could coin and counterfeit
New words with little or no wit;
And when with hasty noise he spoke 'em,
The ignorant for current took 'em. Hudibras.

E'MANANT. adj. [emanans, Lat.] Issuing from something else.

The first act of the divine nature, relating to the world, and his administration thereof, is an emanant act: the most wise counsel and purpose of Almighty God terminate in those two great transient or emanant acts or works, the work of creation and providence. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

To E'MANATE. v. n. [emano, Lat.] To issue or flow from something else.

EMANA'TION. n. s. [emanatio, Lat.]

1. The act of issuing or proceeding from any other substance.

Aristotle said, that it streamed by connatural result and emanation from God, the infinite and eternal Mind, as the light issues from the Sun. South.

2. That which issues from another substance; an efflux; effluvium.

The experience of those profitable and excellent emanations from God, may be, and commonly are, the first motive of our love. Taylor.

Another way of attraction is delivered by a tenuous emanation, or continued effluvium, which, after some distance, retracteth unto itself; as in syrups, oils, and viscosities, which spun, at length retire into their former dimensions. Brown.

Such were the features of her heav'nly face;
Her limbs were formed with such harmonious grace;
So faultless was the frame, as if the whole
Had been an emanation of the soul. Dryden.

The letters, every judge will see, were by no means efforts of the genius, but emanations of the heart. Pope.

Each emanation of his fires
That beams on earth, each virtue he inspires;
Each art he prompts, each charm he can create;
Whate'er he gives, are giv'n for you to hate. Pope.

EMANA'TIVE. adj. [from emano, Lat.] Issuing from another. Dict.

To EMA'NCIPATE. v. a. [emancipo, Lat.] To set free from servitude; to restore to liberty.

In golden buskins of costly cordwain. Fairy Q.

To EMBA'LM. v. a. [embaumer, Fr. embalsamer, Span.] To impregnate a body with aromaticks, that it may resist putrefaction.

Embalm me,
Then lay me forth; although unqueen'd, yet like
A queen, and daughter to a king, inter me. Shakesp.

I would shew future times
What you were, and teach them t' urge towards such:
Verse embalms virtue, and tombs or thrones of rhymes
Preserve frail transitory fame as much
As spice doth bodies from corrupt air's touch. Donne.

Muse! at that name thy sacred sorrows shed;
Those tears eternal that embalm the dead. Pope.

EMBA'LMER. n. s. [from embalm.] One that practises the art of embalming and preserving bodies.

The Romans were not so good embalmers as the Egyptians, so the body was utterly consumed. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

To EMBA'R. v. a. [from bar.]

1. To shut; to enclose.

Themselves for fear into his jaws to fall,
He forc'd to castle strong to take their flight;
Where fast embar'd in mighty brazen wall,
He has them now four years besieg'd to make them thrall. Spenser.

In form of airy members fair embar'd
His spirits pure were subject to our sight. Fairfax.

2. To stop; to hinder by prohibition; to block up.

Translating the mart unto Calais, he embared all further trade for the future. Bacon's Henry VII.

If this commerce 'twixt heav'n and earth were not
Embar'd, and all this traffick quite forgot,
She, for whose loss we have lamented thus,
Would work more fully and pow'rfully on us. Donne.

EMBARCA'TION. n. s. [from embark.]

1. The act of putting on shipboard.

The French gentlemen were very solicitous for the embarcation of the army, and for the departure of the fleet. Clarendon.

2. The act of going on shipboard.

EMBA'RGO. n. s. [embargar, Span.] A prohibition to pass; in commerce, a stop put to trade.

He knew that the subjects of Flanders drew so great commodity from the trade of England as by embargo they would soon wax weary of Perkin. Bacon's Henry VII.

After an embargo of our trading ships in the river of Bourdeaux, and other points of sovereign affront, there did succeed the action of Rheez. Wotton.

I was not much concerned, in my own particular, for the embargo which was laid upon it. Dryden.

To EMBA'RK. v. a. [embarquer, Fr.]

1. To put on shipboard.

Of mankind, so numerous late,
All left, in one small bottom swam embark'd. Milton.

Myself, my king's embassador will go. Dryden.

EMBA'SSADRESS. n. s. A woman sent on a publick message.

With fear the modest matron lifts her eyes,
And to the bright embassadress replies. Garth's Ovid.

EMBASSAGE. } n. s. [It may be observed,
EMBASSY. } that though our authors write almost indiscriminately embassador, or ambassador, embassage, or ambassage; yet there is scarcely an example of ambassy, all concurring to write embassy.]

1. A publick message; a message concerning business between princes or states.

Fresh embassy and suits,
Nor from the state nor private friends, hereafter,
Will I lend ear to. Shakesp. Coriolanus.

When he was at Newcastle he sent a solemn embassage unto James king of Scotland, to treat and conclude a peace with him. Bacon's Hen. VII.

The peace polluted thus, a chosen band
He first commissions to the Latian land,
In threat'ning embassy. Dryden's Æneid.

2. Any solemn message.

He sends the angels on embassies with his decrees. Taylor.

3. An errand in an ironical sense.

A bird was made fly with such art to carry a written embassage among the ladies, that one might say, If a live bird, how taught? If dead, how made? Sidney.

Nimble mischance, that art so light of foot,
Doth not thy embassage belong to me;
And am I last that know it? Shakesp. Rich. II.

To EMBA'TTLE. v. a. [from battle.] To range in order or array of battle.

The English are embattled;
To horse! you gallant princes, strait to horse!
Shakesp.

I could drive her from the ward of her reputation, her marriage-vow, and a thousand other her defences, which now are too strongly embattled against me. Shakesp.

On their embattl'd ranks the waves return,
And overwhelm the war! Milton's Par. Lost.

Embattl'd nations strive in vain
The hero's glory to restrain:
Streams arm'd with rocks, and mountains red with fire,
In vain against his force conspire. Prior.

To EMBA'TTLE. v. n. To be ranged in battle array.

The night
Is shiny, and they say we shall embattle
By the second hour of the morn. Shakesp.

To EMBA'Y. v. a. [from baigner to bathe, Fr.]

1. To bathe; to wet; to wash. Not used.

In her lap a little babe did play
His cruel spurt;
For in her streaming blood he did embay
His little hands, and tender joints embrew.
Fairy Queen.

Every sense the humour sweet embay'd,
And, slumb'ring soft, my heart did steal away.
Fairy Queen.

2. [From bay.] To inclose in a bay; to land lock.

If that the Turkish fleet
Be not inshelter'd and embay'd, they're drown'd.
Shakesp.

To EMBE'LLISH. v. a. [embellir, Fr.] To adorn: to beautify; to grace with ornaments; to decorate.

How much more beauteous had the fountain been,
Embellish'd with her first created green;
Where crystal streams through living turf had run,
Contented with an urn of native stone. Dryd. Juv.

The names of the figures that embellished the discourses of those that understood the art of speaking, are not the art and skill of speaking well. Locke.

That which was once the most beautiful spot of Italy, covered with palaces, embellished by emperors, and celebrated by poets, has now nothing to shew but ruins. Addison on Italy.

EMBE'LLISHMENT. n. s. [from embellish.] Ornament; adventitious beauty; decoration; adscititious grace; any thing that confers the power of pleasing.

Cultivate the wild licentious savage
With wisdom, discipline, and liberal arts,
The embellishments of life. Addison's Cato.

Apparitions, visions, and intercourses of all kinds between the dead and the living, are the frequent and familiar embellishments of the legends of the Romish church. Atterbury

E'MBERING. n. s. The ember days. A word used by old authors, now obsolete.

For causes good so many ways,
Keep emb'rings well, and fasting days;
What law commands, we ought to obey,
For Friday, Saturn, and Wednesday. Tusser

E'MBERS. n. s. [Without a singular æmyna, Sax. ashes; einmyria, Islandick, hot ashes or cinders.] Hot cinders; ashes not yet extinguished.

Take hot embers, and put them about a bottle filled with new beer, almost to the very neck; let the bottle be well stopped, lest it fly out; and continue it, renewing the embers every day for the space of ten days. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

If the air will not permit,
Some still removed place will fit,
While glowing embers through the room
Teach light to counterfeit a gloom. Milton

While thus heav'n's highest counsels, by the low
Footsteps of their effects, he trac'd too well,
He tost his troubled eyes, embers that glow
Now with new rage, and wax too hot for hell.
Crashaw.

He said, and rose, as holy zeal inspires;
He rakes hot embers, and renews the fires.
Dryden's Virgil.

E'MBERWEEK. n. s. [The original of this word has been much controverted: some derive it from embers or ashes strewed by penitents on their heads; but Nelson decides in favour of Mareschal, who derives it from ymbren or embren a course or circumvolution.] A week in which an ember day falls.

The ember days at the four seasons are the Wednesday, Friday, and Saturday after the first Sunday in Lent, the feast of Pentecost, September 14, December 13. Common Prayer.

Stated times appointed for fasting are Lent, and the four seasons of the year called emberweeks.
Ayliffe's Parergon.

To EMBE'ZZLE. v. n. [This word seems corrupted by an ignorant pronunciation from imbecile.]

2. The thing appropriated.

To EMBLA'ZE. v. a. [blasonner, Fr.]

1. To adorn with glittering embellishments.

Th' unsought diamonds
Would so emblaze the forehead of the deep,
And so bestud with stars, that they below
Would grow inur'd to light. Milton.

No weeping orphan saw his father's stores
Our shrines irradiate, or emblaze the floors. Pope.

2. To blazon; to paint with ensigns armorial.

Nor shall this blood be wiped from thy point,
But thou shalt wear it as a herald's coat,
T' emblaze the honour which thy master got. Shak.

He from the glittering staff unfurl'd
Th' imperial ensign, streaming to the wind,
With gems and golden lustre rich emblaz'd,
Seraphick arms and trophies. Milton's Par. Lost.

To EMBLA'ZON. v. a. [blasonner, Fr.]

1. To adorn with figures of heraldry; to grace with ensigns armorial.

A knight her met, in mighty arms embost'd. Fairy Queen.

4. [emboscare, Ital.] To inclose in a thicket.

Like that self-begotten bird
In th' Arabian woods embost. Milton's Agonistes.

5. To hunt hard.

When a deer is hard run and foams at the mouth, he is said to be embost: a dog also, when he is strained with hard running, especially upon hard ground, will have his knees swelled, and then he is said to be embost, from bosse, French, a tumour. Hanmer.

Oh, he is more mad
Than Telamon for his shield; the boar of Thessaly
Was never so embost. Shakesp.

We have almost embost him: you shall see his fall to-night. Shakesp.

EMBO'SSMENT. n. s. [from emboss.]

1. Any thing standing out from the rest; jut; eminence.

I wish also, in the very middle, a fair mount, with three ascents and alleys, enough for four to walk a-breast; which I would have to be perfect circles, without any bulwarks or embossments. Bacon's Essays.

2. Relief; rising work.

They are at a loss about the word pendentis; some fancy it expresses only the great embossment of the figure, others believe it hung off the helmet in alto relievo. Addison on Italy.

To EMBO'TTLE. v. a. [bouteille, Fr.] To include in bottles; to bottle.

Stirom, firmest fruit
Embottled, long as Priamean Troy
Withstood the Greeks, endures. Philips.

To EMBO'WEL. v. a. [from bowel.] To eviscerate; to deprive of the entrails; to exenterate.

The schools,
Embowelled of their doctrine, have left off
The danger to itself. Shakesp.

Embowell'd will I see thee by and by;
Till then, in blood, by noble Percy lye. Shakesp.

The roar
Embowell'd with outrageous noise the air,
And all her entrails tore. Milton's Par. Lost.

Fossils and minerals that th' embowell'd earth
Displays. Philips.

To EMBRA'CE. v. a. [embrasser, Fr.]

The royal house embroil'd in civil war,
Rais'd on her dusky wings she cleaves the skies. Dryden.

2. To perplex; to entangle.

The Christian antiquities at Rome, though of a fresher date, are so embroiled with fable and legend, that one receives but little satisfaction. Addison on Italy.

3. In the following passage the word seems improperly used for broil or burn

That knowledge, for which we boldly attempt to rifle God's cabinet, should, like the coal from the altar, serve only to embroil and consume the sacrilegious invaders. Decay of Piety.

To* EMBRO'THEL. v a. [brothel, brodel.] To inclose in a brothel.

Men, which chuse
Law practise for mere gain, boldly repute,
Worse than embrothel'd strumpets prostitute. Don.

E'MBRYO. } n. s. [ἔμβρυον.]
E'MBRYON. }

1. The offspring yet unfinished in the womb.

The bringing forth of living creatures may be accelerated, if the embryo ripeneth and perfecteth sooner. Bacon.

An exclusion before conformation, before the birth can bear the name of the parent, or be so much as properly called an embryon. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

The earth was form'd, but in the womb as yet
Of waters, embryon immature involv'd
Appear'd not. Milton's Paradise Lost.

In that dark womb are the signs and rudiments of an embryo world. Burnet's Theory.

When the crude embryo careful nature breeds,
See how she works, and how her work proceeds. Blackmore.

While the promis'd fruit
Lies yet a little embryo, unperceiv'd
Within its crimson folds. Thomson's Spring.

2. The state of any thing yet not fit for production; yet unfinished.

The company little suspected what a noble work I had then in embryo. Swift.

EME. n. s. [eame, Sax.] Uncle. Now obsolete.

Whilst they were young, Cassibelan their eme,
Was by the people chosen in their stead;
Who on him took the royal diadem,
And goodly well it long time governed. Spenser.

EME'NDABLE. adj. [emendo, Lat.] Capable of emendation; corrigible.

EMENDA'TION. n. s. [emendo, Lat.]

1. Correction; alteration of any thing from worse to better.

The essence and relation of any thing in being, is fitted, beyond any emendation, for its action and use; and shews it to proceed from a mind of the highest understanding. Grew.

2. An alteration made in the text by verbal criticism.

EMENDA'TOR. n. s. [emendo, Lat.] A corrector; an improver; an alterer for the better.

E'MERALD. n. s. [emeraude, Fr. smaragdus, Lat.] A green precious stone.

The emerald is evidently the same with the ancient smaragdus; and, in its most perfect state, is perhaps the most beautiful of all the gems. The rough emerald is usually of a very bright and naturally polished surface, and is ever of a pure and beautiful green, without the admixture of any other colour. The oriental emerald is of the hardness of the saphire and ruby, and is second only to the diamond in lustre and brightness. Hill on Fossils.

Do you not see the grass how in colour they excel the emerald? Sidney.

The emerald is a bright grass green: it is found in fissures of rocks, along with copper ores. Woodward on Fossils.

Nor deeper verdure dies the robe of Spring,
When first she gives it to the southern gale,
Than the green emerald shows. Thomson's Summer.

To* EME'RGE. v. n. [emergo, Lat.]

1. To rise out of any thing in which it is covered.

They emerged, to the upper part of the spirit of wine, as much of them as lay immersed in the spirit. Boyle.

The mountains emerged, and became dry land again, when the waters retired. Burnet's Theory

Thetis, not unmindful of her son,
Emerging from the deep, to beg her boon,
Pursu'd their track. Dryden's Homer.

2. To issue; to proceed.

If the prism was turned about its axis that way, which made the rays emerge more obliquely out of the second refracting surface of the prism, the image soon became an inch or two longer, or more. Newton's Opticks.

3. To rise; to mount from a state of depression or obscurity; to rise into view.

Darkness, we see, emerges into light;
And shining suns descend to sable night. Dryden's Fables.

When, from dewy shade emerging bright,
Aurora streaks the sky with orient light,
Let each deplore his dead. Pope's Odyssey.

Then from ancient gloom emerg'd
A rising world. Thomson's Summer.

EME'RGENCE. } n. s. [from emerge.]
EME'RGENCY. }

1. The act of rising out of any fluid by which it is covered.

We have read of a tyrant, who tried to prevent the emergence of murdered bodies. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

2. The act of rising or starting into view.

The emergency of colours, upon coalition of the particles of such bodies, as were neither of them of the colour of that mixture whereof they are ingredients, is very well worth our attentive observation. Boyle on Colours.

The white colour of all refracted light, at its very first emergence, where it appears as white as before its incidence, is compounded of various colours. Newton's Opticks.

3. Any sudden occasion; unexpected casualty.

Most of our rarities have been found out by casual emergency, and have been the works of time and chance rather than of philosophy. Glanville's Scepsis.

4. Pressing necessity; exigence. A sense not proper.

In any case of emergency, he would employ the whole wealth of his empire, which he had thus amassed together in his subterraneous exchequer. Addison's Freeholder.

EME'RGENT. adj. [from emerge.]

1. Rising out of that which overwhelms or obscures it.

Love made my emergent fortune once more look
Above the main, which now shall hit the stars. Ben Jonson.

Immediately the mountains huge appear
Emergent, and their broad bare backs upheave
Into the clouds. Milton.

2. Rising into view, or notice, or honour.

The man that is once hated, both his good and his evil deeds oppress him; he is not easily emergent. Ben Jonson.

3. Proceeding or issuing from any thing.

The stoics held a fatality, and a fixed unalterable course of events; but then they held also, that they fell out by a necessity emergent from and inherent in the things themselves, which God himself could not alter. South.

4. Sudden; unexpectedly casual.

All the lords declared, that, upon any emergent occasion, they would mount their servants upon their horses. Clarendon.

E'MERODS. } n. s. [corrupted by ignorant pronunciation from E'MEROIDS. } hemorrhoids, αἱμορροΐδες.] Painful swellings of the hemorrhoidal veins; piles.

EME'RSION. n. s. [from emerge.] The time when a star, having been obscured by its too near approach to the sun, appears again.

The time was in the heliacal emersion, when it becomes at greatest distance from the sun Brown's Vulgar Errours.

E'MERY. n. s. [smyris, Lat. esmeril, Fr.]

Emery is an iron ore, considerably rich. It is found in the island of Guernsey, in Tuscany, and many parts of Germany. It has a near relation to the magnet. The lapidaries cut the ordinary gems on their wheels by sprinkling the wetted powder over them; but it will not cut diamonds. It is useful in cleaning and polishing steel. Hill's Mat. Medica.

EMETICAL. } adj. [ἐμέω.] Having the EME'TICK. } quality of provoking vomits.

Various are the temperaments and operations of herbs; some purgative, some emetick, and some sudorifick. Hale.

EME'TICALLY. adv. [from emetical.] In such a manner as to provoke to vomit.

It has been complained of, that preparations of silver have produced violent vomits; whereas we have not observed duly refined silver to work emetically, even in women and girls. Boyle.

EMICA'TION. n. s. [emicatio, Lat.] Sparkling; flying off in small particles, as sprightly liquors.

Iron, in aqua fortis, will fall into ebullition, with noise and emication, as also a crass and fumid exhalation. Brown.

EMIC'TION. n. s. [from emictum, Lat.] Urine; what is voided by the urinary passages.

Gravel and stone grind away the flesh, and effuse the blood apparent in a sanguine emiction. Harvey on Consumptions.

To E'MIGRATE. v. a. [emigro, Lat.] To remove from one place to another.

EMIGRA'TION. n. s. [from emigrate.] Change of habitation; removal from one place to another.

Mountains abound with different vegetables, every vertex or eminency affording new kinds. Ray on the Creation.

3. A part rising above the rest.

They must be smooth, almost imperceptible to the touch, and without either eminence or cavities. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

4. A place where one is exposed to general notice.

A satyr or libel on one of the common stamp, never meets with that reception as what is aimed at a person whose merit places him upon an eminence, and gives him a more conspicuous figure. Addison's Spectator.

5. Exaltation; conspicuousness; state of being exposed to view; reputation; celebrity; fame; preferment; greatness.

You've too a woman's heart, which ever yet
Affected eminence, wealth, sovereignty. Shakesp. Henry VIII.

Alterations are attributed to the powerfullest under princes, where the eminency of one obscureth the rest. Wotton.

He deserv'd no such return
From me, whom he created what I was,
In that bright eminence, and with his good
Upbraided none. Milton's Par. Lost.

Where men cannot arrive to any eminency of estate, yet religion makes a compensation, by teaching content. Tillotson.

These two were men of eminency, of learning as well as piety. Stillingfleet.

6. Supreme degree.

Whatever pure thou in the body enjoy'st,
And pure thou wert created, we enjoy
In eminence. Milton's Par. Lost.

7. Notice; distinction.

Let your remembrance still apply to Banquo;
Present him eminence both with eye and tongue. Shakesp.

8. A title given to cardinals.

EMINENT. adj. [eminens, Lat.]

1. High; lofty.

Thou hast built unto thee an eminent place. Exe.

Satan, in gesture proudly eminent,
Stood like a tow'r. Milton.

Lavinia will I make my emperess,
Rome's royal mistress, mistress of my heart. Shak.

E'MPEROUR. n. s. [empereur, Fr. imperator, Lat.] A monarch of title and dignity superior to a king: as the emperour of Germany.

Charles the emperour,
Under pretence to see the queen his aunt,
Makes visitation. Shakesp. Hen. VIII.

E'MPERY. n. s. [empire, Fr. imperium, Lat.] Empire; sovereignty; dominion. A word out of use.

A lady
So fair, and fasten'd to an empery,
Would make the great'st king double. Shakesp.

Take on you the charge
And kingly government of this your land;
Not as protector, steward, substitute,
But as successively from blood to blood,
Your right of birth, your empery your own. Shak.

E'MPHASIS. n. s. [ἐμφασις] A remarkable stress laid upon a word or sentence; particular force impressed by style or pronunciation.

Oh, that brave Cæsar!
—Be choaked with such another emphasis. Shak.

Emphasis not so much regards the time as a certain grandeur, whereby some letter, syllable, word, or sentence is rendered more remarkable than the rest, by a more vigorous pronunciation, and a longer stay upon it. Holder.

These questions have force and emphasis, if they be understood of the antediluvian earth. Burnet's Th.

EMPHA'TICAL. } adj. [ἐμφάινω.]
EMPHA'TICK. }
